Lewis Charges Tydings Raised Price of Drugs

Goldsborough Will Stay Neutral in Eastern Shore Campaign.

Pennington Comes To Senator's Aid

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Baltimore, Md., Aug. 23.— Two major "breaks" for Senator Millard E. Tydings in his campaign for renomination against Representative David J. Lewis, of Cumberland, were reported today:

1. Representative T. Alan Goldsborough, upon whom Lewis forces depended to help swing the strong pro-Tydings Eastern Shore counties for the Roosevelt-supported western Marylander, announced he would keep "hands off" the bitter contest.

2. Mayor George T. Pennington, of Havre de Grace, Tydings' home town, defended the Senator against Lewis charges that he had profited personally from construction of a yacht basin near his home. The mayor said the townspeople had voted for construction of the basin and that Tydings didn't even vote in the election.

Goldsborough, so Lewis forces had predicted and hoped, planned to announce his support of Lewis as soon as he was assured he would have no opposition for a tenth term in Congress as Representative. He is 60, dean of the Maryland delegation in point of service, and a member of the House Rivers and Harbors Committee.

No Opposition.

Deadline for filing in opposition to Goldsborough passed last midnight. And it passed with no opposition for the Congressman from candidates in either the Republican or Democratic party.

The Havre de Grace defense of Tydings was enlivened by charges that the accusations of personal profit were the work of a ghost writer for Lewis holding a personal feud against Senator Tydings—one whose father had been removed from office as result of a congressional inquiry sponsored by Tydings.

"It is perfectly evident to me now," Tydings said, "that Drew Pearson is writing the Lewis speeches. Drew Pearson being the son of the deposed Governor of the Virgin Islands. I don't care to dignify this second-hand attack with notice."

Lewis issued a statement denying the ghost writing charge.

Lewis Charged WPA Use.

Pearson's father, the late Paul M. Pearson, was recalled from his post as Governor of the Virgin Islands after Senator Tydings had demanded investigation of the insular administration.

Yesterday, Lewis had charged the Senator got WPA funds used to build a yacht basin in front of his Havre de Grace home, although another site was preferable; obtained a Home Owners Loan Corporation loan on his house, later repaid, and induced the WPA to build an unneeded road to his new country home in Oakton.

Mayor Pennington said of these charges:

'Little Davy' Nears D. C. Line to Poke Fun at 'Schnickelfritz.'

Calls Fair Trade Bill Cost-Fixing

By Edward T. Folliard

Representative David J. Lewis, New Deal candidate in Maryland's senatorial fight, brought his campaign to within a few miles of the District of Columbia line last night. He spoke at Branchville, Prince Georges County, and here, as elsewhere, he labeled Tydings a Republican masquerading as a Democrat.

"You tell 'em, Davy!" cried a man in the crowd as Lewis went after his rival.

The diminutive, 69-year-old candidate was a half hour late in arriving, but the crowd—which included many Marylanders who work for the Government in Washington—quickly forgave him once his oration was under way.

Justifies Roosevelt.

He justified President Roosevelt's entrance into the Maryland fight on his behalf, pointing out that the Constitution gives the Chief Executive the right of "ingress and egress" where Maryland is concerned.

He accused Tydings of befriending "Dr. Schnickelfritz" and other manufacturers of patent medicines when he put through his fair-trade practices, or "price-fixing" bill.

The women in the audience were particularly aroused when he told how this had raised the price of drug store articles.

Representative Lewis charged that Tydings voted 22 times with Senator Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan; that he had voted against five bills to help the farmers, and had "completely ducked" a vote on the social security bill, a measure designed to aid millions.

Democracy "of the Heart."

"The Senator," he said, "wants to run as a Democrat, but he is not a Democrat at heart. Democracy is an affair of the heart, not a formula of dead doctrines.

"Senator Tydings should not be running as a Democrat, but, as an antagonist of Democracy, he should be wearing a Republican label.

"Tydings says he voted for his convictions. Let's examine that. There are two kinds of convictions. There is the Republican with Republican convictions. We respect him. And then there is the Democrat. When he is holding a Democratic office, we expect him to ex-

D. C. Boy, Missing 24 Hours, Comes Home With Fish

Fishermen, present and future, take notice of the zeal of 12-year-old Charles E. Maust, son of Policeman Raymond Maust, of the First Precinct.

Charles dreamed his fishing story and then made his dream come true.

He nearly drove his parents frantic when he fished for 24 hours without returning home. Police on both sides of the river searched for the sturdy sportsman. Mr. and Mrs. Maust feared he might have drowned. He never had been away all night before from his home at 2308 North Lexington street, Arlington, Va.

Tokyo Plane Crash Kills 14, Hurts 150

Tokyo (Wednesday), Aug. 24 (AP). Fourteen persons were killed and at least 150 were injured today when two airplanes collided over an iron foundry, which was set afire by exploding gasoline. Ten of the dead were workmen, burned in the foundry.

The crash was in Omori, suburban district. The three crew members of one of the ships, a transport plane, died in the crash. The pilot of the other craft, a training plane, jumped but his parachute did not open and he was killed. His plane fell in front of a geisha house, but none of the occupants was injured.

Frank Hawks Killed In Fiery Plane Crash

Was in Small Sporting Plane; Companion Critically Hurt.

By the Associated Press.

East Aurora, N. Y., Aug. 23.—Frank Hawks, who rode the winds to world-wide fame as a speed pilot, made his last flight tonight at the controls of a small sport plane which tangled in electric wires and crashed in flames.

"I expect to die in an airplane," America's ace flier told his friends. "I won't feel happy if I don't."

Then he abandoned the metal monsters in which he set his records for an executive post, selling tiny ships built for safety and comfort. His prediction came true when he was flying such a ship with a prospective customer, J. Hazard Campbell, of East Aurora, who was seriously injured.

Farmers pulled the two men from their burning craft. Hawks was bleeding profusely about the face. The victims were rushed to a Buffalo hospital.

Both men had third-degree burns, fractured limbs and lacerations of the face and body. Hawks died a few hours later. Campbell's condition was critical.

The aircar burned to a mass of twisted wreckage. One fire extinguisher in the plane exploded. Another was not used.

By Howard F. Wentworth.

A Nation-wide movement to mobilize motorists in a collective, continuing fight against highway tragedies—patterned after the present Washington Post-Junior Board of Commerce safety program—has been launched in Washington under the banner of "Organized Motorists, Inc.," it was learned last night.

A non-profit association designed to organize all types of vehicle drivers in a permanent life-saving crusade, the new group is headed by Charles T. Tilden, chairman of the committee on transportation, Yale University and one-time research specialist of the United States Bureau of Public Roads.

Another D. C. Firm Joins.

Other sponsors are William Sabine, local civic leader; Walter B. Clarkson, vice president of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co.; C. F. Jacobsen, cashier of the National Metropolitan Bank; Charles H. Doing, vice president of the Washington Loan & Trust Co., and Paul Sleman, attorney.

And as the newly organized group laid plans to enlist support in the 48 States, another local trucking firm joined The Post-Junior Board accident-prevention drive.

Blackistone, Inc., florists, of 1407 H street northwest, through Z. D. Blackistone 3d, agreed to inaugurate a "safe driving" program among its six delivery truck drivers and pledged co-operation in current efforts to prevent child injuries and deaths. The Post-Junior Board safety emblem will be displayed on all the firm's vehicles.

1,500 Trucks Signed Up.

The newest enrollment brings more than 1,500 light delivery trucks under a single safety banner.

Meanwhile, new efforts to secure a trained traffic expert for Washington were undertaken yesterday by the Alumni Association of Northwestern University.

Hunger-Strike Dead Scalded, Coroner Says

By the United Press.

Philadelphia, Aug. 23.—Four mutinous convicts were roasted alive in their cramped isolation cells at Philadelphia County Prison, it was learned tonight.

The disclosure followed the visit of Coroner Charles M. Hersch to the solitary confinement ward where four convicts found dead Monday morning were confined for leading a five-day hunger strike.

Victims Suffocated.

The circumstances surrounding the deaths were suggested by Coroner Hersch after his visit to the prison and authoritative sources later disclosed details of a night of horror in the two tiny "Klondike cells."

According to Coroner Hersch, who described the cells as "worse than the black hole of Calcutta," the men were suffocated.

It was learned, however, that Hersch was told in the prison that the four convicts, and two companions who survived, were confined behind steel doors and the radiators inside the two tiny cells then heated to the limit.

The water supply to the lone spigot which comprised the cell's furnishings, had been turned off and the men died slowly of intense heat and suffocation, according to Coroner Hersch's informants.

[The Philadelphia Record in a copyright story quoted the coroner as saying:

Seeks "Higher-Ups."

["They took these prisoners and put them in the cell block. They stripped them. They saw to it the block was air tight. And then the steam was turned on. The men did everything they could to keep alive. They were desperate. They crawled to the toilets and scooped up water to try to drink it. And that made them so sick, they retched."—Editor's note.]

Coroner Hersch was said to know the identity of the "person" who turned on the heat in the cells and to have declared he would be arrested. It was learned that the coroner was less interested in the ar-

Alien Inquiry Begins a Junket To Hollywood, Beery Bunds

By Sidney Olson.

Faces aglow with what may have been righteous indignation, the House Committee on Un-American Activities set forth last night on the year's most glittering Congressional junket, which will range from a thorough study of Hollywood, home of the body beautiful, to Eastern Nazi Bund camps, where the beer is imported Muenchener.

Sternly determined to scourge Communism, Fascism, Nazism and all points intermediate, Chairman Dies and his six colleagues laid plans to get more Government aid until they can ask the next Congress for more money.

Dies, the rangy Texan who thought up the inquiry, champed on his 7-inch cigar in anger yesterday at reports the committee's funds were giving out. Waving aside reminders that he himself had said only last week that more money was vitally needed to pursue the investigation unrelentingly, he roared:

"Why, we have been conserving our $25,000! We have most of it still left! This thing has only started."

The committee revealed last night that the Justice Department had refused to supply it aid of G-men from the Bureau of Investigation. At the morning session the members, huddling together while three witnesses droned on about com-

Hines 'Fixed' Schultz Case, Fe[illegible]n Says

Ex-Convict Testifies 'Protector' Received $500 a Week.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New York, Aug. 23.—James J. Hines "fixed" a case in 1932 for Dutch Schultz and his Harlem policy racketeers in the court of Magistrate Hulon G. Capshaw by a personal word to the magistrate, George Weinberg, ex-convict testified today in court, where Hines is being tried on charges of conspiracy to break the lottery laws.

The veteran Tammany leader also "fixed" a case in the court of the late Magistrate Francis J. Erwin, Weinberg testified, and had police officers of the chief inspector's squad shifted out of the area in which the gang operated, when their raids moved the mob to complain to their "protector."

Half the chief inspector's squad was shifted in ten days, said Weinberg, when Hines went into action, and a plainclothesman who insisted on searching some shops in defiance of Weinberg's warnings found himself dropped back into uniform.

Says He Got $500 a Week.

The witness swore payments he made to Hines at $500 a week in 1932 rose swiftly to $750 and $1,000, averaging $750 from 1932 to 1935, all payments meticulously entered in Dutch Schultz's "master sheets," under the heading of "Pop," the gangsters' nickname for the politician.

He reiterated the charge of the prosecution that Hines put "Red" Williams, his only colored election district captain, on the Dutch Shultz pay roll, and added that he also got Leo Rosenthal, another of his political henchmen, a job with Schultz at $50 weekly.

Weinberg testified Hines advised moving of the policy banks to suburban Mount Vernon, N. Y.

The opening up of central headquarters on Lenox avenue, Weinberg said, was delayed at express orders of Schultz until the Tammany leader approved it.

Hines Gulps At Testimony.

When a change of police chiefs in Mount Vernon resulted in the banks being driven back to New York, Weinberg said, Hines provided the gang with the services of "Jack" Plunkett, then superintendent of buildings in Manhattan, to help intercede with former Mayor Leslie Bateman of Mount Vernon for protection in a new location. The mission was unsuccessful.

He linked Hines with the Schultz mob in at least 16 instances, and depicted the Tammany leader, almost without interruption by court or counsel for the defense, as a key figure in the inner circle of the gang.

U. S. Power Firm Is Expropriated By Costa Ricans

San Jose, Costa Rica, Aug. 23.—President Cortes today approved a proposal, authorized by the Senate, for expropriation of the properties of the American-owned Electric Bond & Share Corporation which serves San Jose with electric light and power as well as street car service.

The expropriation plan climaxes a lengthy dispute between the government and the company over terms of a new operating franchise. Light and power rates proposed by the company were rejected by the administration as excessive.

Under the expropriation proposal, the properties will be mortgaged by the government to secure a foreign loan with which to indemify the company in accordance with assessed value of the holdings.

Hull, these persons said, had requested in a note from the United States due to arrive in Mexico City today that Mexico begin installment payments toward the expropriated lands, while both governments cooperate in appraising their value.

Entente Bids Against Hitler For Hungary

Alliance Offers Pacts, Ends Arms Limit as Reich Entertains Regent.

By the Associated Press.

Budapest, Aug. 23.—A German diplomat declared tonight that "Hungary will have to decide soon between Bled and Berlin." He declined to allow his name to be used.

The statement referred to efforts of the Little Entente—Czechoslovakia, Rumania and Yugoslavia—to align Hungary on their side while Germany is attempting to bring the nation under her sphere of influence.

In closing sessions of a conference at Bled, Yugoslavia, the Little Entente nations today:

Granted Hungary military equality, sweeping away military clauses of the World War Trianon Treaty by abrogating its arms restrictions;

Announced that six agreements—non-aggression pacts and minority agreements between Hungary and the Little Entente nations separately—would be concluded in the near future.

The action came as Admiral Horthy, Hungarian regent, was being feted by Reichsfuhrer Hitler during a state visit to Germany.

Italian observers said the Little Entente's decision was "in line with

Parley Asked By Roosevelt On Labor Law

President Says He Agrees With Green Changes Are Necessary.

By the Associated Press.

Hyde Park, N. Y., Aug. 23.—President Roosevelt projected today a Government-labor-capital conference to consider changes in the National Labor Relations act.

The President asserted at his press conference he had agreed with William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, that the law should be clarified.

He said it was quite possible that legislative clarifications would be sought in the next Congress, but that he had no specific changes in mind.

To decide what changes are desirable, he said, it will be necessary to consult a number of persons. These he specified as representatives of the National Labor Relations Board, all labor unions and employers.

The President said that in a conference with Green last Saturday the two did talk about the Wagner labor law and agreed it should be made more clear.

No human draftsman can foresee all developing situations in administration of a law, he commented, but since the Government now has had about three years' experience

Rural Mail Convention Hails Letter Box That Won't Stick

A streamlined mailbox for R. F. D. patrons was shown yesterday at the thirty-fifth annual convention of the National Rural Letter Carriers Association. The invention of an Alabama farmer, a rank amateur at the postal business, it made its debut in an atmosphere of approval mingled with some criticism from the more conservative members of the body.

The contraption is on view in the lobby of the Mayflower, headquarters of the convention, which was opened formally yesterday morning with talks by Postmaster General James A. Farley and Chairman Robert Ramspeck of the House Civil Service Committee.

After the business meeting, sightseeing trips and a tree-planting ceremony at the Sylvan Theater, Adney Coleman had the chance he has awaited for eight years—the opportunity for which he came all the way from his home in Evergreen, Ala.

As half-admiring, half-skeptical letter carriers gathered around his stand he showed the wonders of his mail box. In shape it resembles the standard box now in use. The material, galvanized iron, also is similar. The big difference is in the ease with which it opens. Coleman merely pressed a finger on the rear of the container and the entire

Says He Protests Just on Principle

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hyde Park, N. Y., Aug. 23.—In a rebuke aimed chiefly at the Republican Party and the anti-Administration press, President Roosevelt today condemned intervention of one party in the primary of another as a violation of public morality and a destructive assault on the principle of the direct primary.

The President charged specifically that Republicans in Idaho had thwarted the will of the Democratic Party and were rallying their forces to help Administration foes in Georgia and Maryland.

He explained, however, that his objection would apply equally if Republicans were to enter a Democratic primary in any State to help out a close friend of his. In fact, he added, it was just as reprehensible for Representative O'Connor, of New York, a critic of the New Deal, to enter the Republican primary in the hope of winning a Republican as well as a Democratic designation.

"Tory Press" Chided.

The "Tory press" came in for a share of the Presidential castigation for having failed, as the President put it, to protest against destruction of the direct primary principle.

Although he seemed greatly wrought up, the President declined to say whether he would answer what he seemed to construe as a Republican challenge by going to the aid of Senator Pope, defeated New Deal candidate in Idaho, or by participating further in the New Deal drive to defeat Senator Tydings, of Maryland, and Representative O'Connor.

To repeated promptings that he disclose his plans, the President replied that he had but two engagements for next month, the 150th anniversary celebration here on September 17 of the adoption of the Constitution by New York, and an anniversary celebration of the battles of Chickamauga and Lookout Mountain, at Chattanooga.

Parries Question on Pope.

As to the Idaho situation, he pointed out that Senator Pope had not yet announced whether he would run independently in the fall election against Representative Clark, victor in the Democratic primary, and the Republican candidate. A question as to whether Senator Pope would have his help if he decided to run, the President turned aside as an "if" question.

The President admitted he had many telegrams from New Deal supporters in Maryland urging him to visit Baltimore Labor Day and answer Senator Tyding's accusation that he was playing the role of carpetbagger in intervening in the Maryland primary. The President recently made clear in a press conference statement his preference for Representative Lewis in Maryland and James H. Fay, opponent of Representative O'Connor, in New York.

Angriest at Tydings.

Although the President insisted his plans were uncertain, belief persisted he would go into Maryland and give Senator Tydings substantially the same kind of treatment he gave Senator George in Georgia several days ago—perhaps omitting to call Senator Tydings a friend and "a gentleman and a scholar."

Those close to the summer White House say the President's resentment runs stronger against the Maryland Senator than against any other Democrat on the "purge" list.

Advisability of Senator Pope running as an independent in Idaho was discussed at a week-end conference here in which not only the Senator but Harry Hopkins and Au-

McCarran Foe Tries to Make 'Purge' His Own

Hilliard Quotes Roosevelt as 'Wanting Senators to Play Ball.'

By Robert C. Albright.

Despite careful neutrality on the President's visit to Nevada, Mr. Roosevelt's "purge" has been dragged into that State's primaries by Senator McCarran's New Deal opposition.

The President is being quoted directly as saying McCarran's "influence" is ended and Nevada may expect no further help through him, it was learned here yesterday.

Albert Hilliard, former Washington resident and McCarran's "100-per-cent" opponent, is telling Nevada voters the President told him: "Senator McCarran has consistently and stubbornly refused to play ball. That is why I am against him, and that is why I wish you the best of luck in your campaign."

Brotherhood Indorses Him.

Meanwhile, Labor, standard railroad brotherhood weekly publication, brought out a special "Nevada edition indorsing McCarran for reelection. Running to 50,000 copies, the edition is designed to reach every family in Nevada. It asserts that "McCarran will win the victory he deserves if the voters get the truth.

Labor has published similar special editions for Senator Pepper, of Florida; Senator Barkley, of Kentucky, and Senator Thomas, of Oklahoma, all of whom had White House indorsement and won the nominations.

In one speech, Hilliard told a Las Vegas, Nev., audience:

"The President told me on July 13 on the train which bore him through Nevada that whatever influence Senator McCarran had in Washington was gone—that he had made it impossible to help Nevada through him.

Quotes President.

"The President told me, pointing to himself, 'I am not the Administration. I have never asked a Senator to vote one way or another. But I do expect, and the people have every right to expect, that Democratic Senators will play ball with the Administration.'"

The Hilliard speech drew an immediate broadside from the Record-Courier, of Gardnerville, Nev., in an editorial entitled: "And This Is Politics."

After quoting from the speech, the Record-Courier said:

"If States, under the New Deal, are to be made political footballs; if Senators and Representatives are to become rubber stamps, afraid to vote according to the dictates of their hearts; if we of Nevada must agree to send a certain man to Congress to get recognition that rightfully belongs to the Sagebrush State, then we have a dictatorship and not a free democracy as guaranteed under the Constitution."

Both Were on Train.

Both McCarran and Hilliard were on the President's train as it passed through Nevada, and Mr. Roosevelt by no public utterance signaled favor for either Hilliard or McCarran. In Colorado, where Hilliard's father was running against Senator Adams, he had remained similarly neutral.

Reports were current through the State that the President had made every effort to persuade Gov. Richard Kirman, sr., who would have been a formidable candidate, to run against McCarran. Failing in that it was said he had decided not to interefere.

Undismayed, Hilliard is asserting throughout the State that the Administration is opposed to McCarran because "he has spoken against and has voted against every fundamental measure of President Roosevelt and the Democratic Administration."

Hilliard, whose father once served in Congress, was educated at George Washington University here and was at one time assistant enrolling clerk in the House. He served several years in the consular service.

The battle which reaches a showdown in the September 6 primaries is being conducted on the stump and in advertisements paid for by both contestants.

In one such ad, Hilliard berated McCarran for voting to recommit the wage-hour bill, for State contributions toward relief, against Government financing of public utilities in competition with private utilities, against reciprocal trade treaties, against the St. Lawrence River treaty, against one of the FHA acts and against the interest of Nevada Indians.

"McCarran may be 'independent,' but he has absolutely no influence in Washington, and is never consulted by the President or Administration leaders," Hilliard reiterated in the ad. "His 'independence' is the reason the President totally ignored him while the Presidential special was traveling through Nevada on July 13."

Replies in Ad.

McCarran replied in detail in an advertisement inserted in the same newspaper, the Pioche (Nev.) Record.

He said he voted to recommit the wage-hour bill "because provisions in the then pending bill were definitely dangerous to the interests of organized labor in America and because labor leaders urged recommitment." He said he voted for the wage-hour bill on final passage.

The ad said he followed the late Senate Democratic leader, Joseph T. Robinson, in voting for 25 per cent State contributions toward relief "thus to bring more speedy relief to the needy and to avoid waste and extravagance by bringing each State into direct contact with the needy people, and to increase the allowance to those requiring relief."

He declared he voted for the TVA act, which helped finance public-owned utilities, but against the St. Lawrence waterway treaty because it proposed to spend American money to employ foreign labor in construction of a project on foreign soil. He said he voted for the Federal housing act, for the Wagner low-cost housing act and for the Home Owners Loan Corporation. His Indian bill, he said, would have provided "full payment" to Indians for their lands.

The special edition of "Labor," distributed yesterday, quoted President Green, of the American Federation of Labor, as saying Senator McCarran is of "incalculable benefit to labor and the people generally." It said McCarran had aided Nevada in obtaining $108,500,000 of Federal funds and had labored to remonetize silver.

Dr. Payne Calls Tuberculosis Colored Man's Biggest Problem

DR. HOWARD PAYNE.

391 Died in Capital Last Year, Six Times as Many as Whites; Howard Teacher Blames Poor Housing Conditions and Malnutrition.

By Christine Sadler.

Last year in the District of Columbia 391 colored persons died of tuberculosis. That represented a death rate six times the death rate from tuberculosis among white persons of the city. The tuberculosis figures are higher for colored persons throughout the Nation—but not that much higher.

"Tuberculosis is our greatest medical problem, much greater than syphilis because it is more contagious—due to living conditions—and because it incapacitates the victim," says Dr. Howard Payne, who is in charge of the tuberculosis clinic at Freedmen's Hospital and of an experiment in tuberculosis preventive and educational work at Howard University.

Payne attributes the high rate for the most part to universally poor housing conditions among the District's colored population, to the economic level which often makes proper nutrition impossible, and to traditional lack of good health habits.

"So many of our people come from the rural areas and have no idea concerning sanitation problems in a complex urban life," Dr. Payne points out. "Many of them are on relief and live at an extremely low level of existence. Often as many as 20 of them are forced to use bath facilities designed for five or six."

He doubts the theory that the colored race is more susceptible to tuberculosis than the white and to bear out his doubt points to death statistics in Charleston before 1850 and to a study by a New Orleans doctor who expressed belief as late as 1870 that the colored man "seems to have an immunity" to the white plague.

"As conditions are today, I see no way of measuring the differences in susceptibility," he says.

At Howard University his experiment is simply one of x-ray examinations, and education as to what should be done for treatment and as to how to guard against contagion. As a result of just this, there was no death from tuberculosis at the university last year either among the students or faculty members.

"It was the first free year on record," Dr. Payne says, using the point as strong proof of the facts that tuberculosis is curable and that 'health can be purchased."

Since tuberculosis is so often brought on by social conditions over which colored people have no control and since its treatment and its attendant relief burden must be financed by public funds, it becomes a community economic problem rather than a racial one.

"There is no need to put it on a sentimental basis," Dr. Payne declares.

The Federal Tuberculosis Hospital proposed for the District as a sanatorium, in which the colored doctor could get the training now denied him, would be a boost toward solving the problem not only on a local, but on a Nation-wide front, in the opinion of Dr. Payne. Howard University now trains 55 per cent of the colored doctors of the Nation, but there are few sanatoriums in the country in which they can get the specialized tuberculosis training they need.

A native of the District, Dr. Payne received his college training at Dartmouth and at Howard, and his first clinic experience in New York. He also is on the board of the Family Service Association, on the board of governors of the Medical Chirurgical Society, and a practicing physician.

O'Connor Foe Of Vital Aims, Rival Asserts

Representative Accused of 'Besmirching Name' of President.

By the United Press.

New York, Aug. 23.—Representative O'Connor, New York Democrat, named as one of the chief targets of President Roosevelt's "purge," tonight was accused by his opponent in the coming primary elections of trying to "besmirch the name of the President."

James H. Fay, running against O'Connor for the Democratic nomination in the Sixteenth Assembly District, charged O'Connor with "flagrant misrepresentation" of the disputed reorganization bill, which he opposed, as part of a "flank attack against the vital objectives of the President's program."

In a radio speech, Fay declared that O'Connor's effort to "make out that he is being punished and made the victim of a dictator's purge" were not sincere, and that instead of merely differing with the President, he was one of "the enemies of the President who want to scuttle the whole New Deal."

Lost Leg in Argonne.

(A lawyer never in private practice, Fay's first public job was as secretary to the board of trustees of Bellevue hospital, in 1923. Former Mayor James J. Walker named him deputy commissioner of hospitals in 1929 and he served in that post until Mayor LaGuardia took office in 1934.

(For 11 years he has been president of the Anawanda Democratic club of the twelfth assembly district, south, and is chairman of the Democratic county committee of the district.

(In the Democratic House primary four years ago he lost to O'Connor by only 101 votes.)

"Nobody Likes a Yes-Man."

Referring to O'Connor's speech last week, Fay said:

"They are words coined or transplanted by mercenary publicity agents in the employ of the power trust and other big financial interests which are out to get the President and destroy the New Deal."

Fay said that "nobody likes a yes-man" and that "no one is more eager than the President to have men about him who can really help him frame and put into effect measures which will bring security and social justice to the average man," and he referred to the fact that Senator Wagner of New York also had "differed with the President on more than one important roll call."

"But those who know what is going on in the cloakrooms and committee rooms at Washington know that Bob Wagner is a New Dealer and John O'Connor is an old dealer," Fay said.

He charged O'Connor with keeping the wages and hours bill "locked up for months" in the House rules committee, of which O'Connor is chairman.

Referring to the reorganization bill, Fay said:

"I may differ with John O'Connor on the value of the President's reorganization bill, but I would not condemn him, and I know the President would not condemn him because he voted against this bill. But I do condemn him because instead of defending his vote by discussing terms of the bill, he went out of his way to besmirch the name of the President, and thereby joined forces with the interests that were using the reorganization bill for a flank attack against the vital objectives of the President's program."

The Gallup Poll:

Feeling of Insecurity Is Keynote of Public Attitude Toward New Deal.

By Dr. George Gallup,
Director American Institute of Public Opinion

New York, Aug. 23.—New and dramatic evidence of how a feeling of economic insecurity colors the political attitude of American voters today is revealed in a cross-section survey just completed by the Institute.

GALLUP.

The survey asks voters in all income levels, excluding farmers, "If you (or your husband) lost your (or his) job and couldn't find other work, about how long could you hold out before you had to apply for relief?" and also asked, "Are you for or against Roosevelt today?"

The results show two things:

1. A surprisingly large number of persons have almost no money to fall back upon if they lose their jobs. Thirty-one per cent, or approximately one-third, say they could hold out for only one month or less on savings or other income. One-fifth say they could last for only two to six months, and the rest for longer periods, with some, chiefly in the upper income brackets, saying they would "never" go on relief.

2. The attitude of these people toward Roosevelt is directly correlated with their feeling of relative security or insecurity. Those who are closest to the hand-to-mouth subsistence level—that is, who could hold out the shortest time if they lost their work—are the most in favor of Roosevelt, with the exception of those already on relief. Persons who could hold out for as long as six months are also for him. But those who say they could get along for more than six months are against him.

It seems clear, from this evidence, that political attitudes today are determined not so much by theories of Government as by bread-and-butter economics; that support from the financially insecure continues to be the backbone of New Deal strength.

The Vote by Groups.

Following is a summary of the vote on the first question in the Institute survey. Farmers who work their own farms were not included, since they are not jobholders in the same sense as other people.

IF YOU LOST YOUR JOB AND COULDN'T FIND OTHER WORK, ABOUT HOW LONG COULD YOU HOLD OUT BEFORE YOU HAD TO APPLY FOR RELIEF?

One month or less	31%
Two to six months	20
Six months to two years	14
Three years or more, or indefinitely, or would never go on relief	21
(Persons already on relief)	14

ARE YOU FOR OR AGAINST ROOSEVELT TODAY?

	For	Against
Persons on relief	83%	17%
Persons who could live one month or less without work	65	35
Two to six months	54	46
Six months to two years	46	54
Three years or more	32	68

Security Act Popular.

In view of the relatively high feeling of insecurity among large sections of the population, it is not difficult to understand the popularity of old-age pensions and other provisions of the Social Security act. This New Deal program was approved by approximately 9 in every 10 voters in the Institute's last study on the subject.

Rail Unions Called To Discuss Wages

Chicago, Aug. 23 (AP).—J. A. Phillips, vice chairman of the Railway Labor Executives Association, announced today general chairmen of 18 railroad brotherhoods had been summoned to Chicago August 29 to discuss progress of mediation in the controversy over the carriers' 15 per cent wage cut order.

He said he and George Harrison, chairman of the association, would report to the brotherhood chairmen on all phases of the situation since the national mediation board took charge.

The railroads and the mediators have dealt separately with the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

Whisky Output Less Than Half In 1938 Months

Whisky production, which averaged 20,000,000 gallons monthly in 1936, droped to less than 9,000,000 monthly the first half of this year, W. S. Alexander, administrator, Federal Alcohol Administrator, reported yesterday.

The low rate of production was brought about partly by the fact that stocks in bonded warehouses aggregated more than 471,000,000 gallons on June 30. During the first six months of this year Maryland was the fourth largest whisky producing State.

Bar Group Names Richberg, Smith

Two Washingtonians were appointed to important committee posts of the American Bar Association yesterday, according to an Associated Press dispatch from Chicago, association headquarters.

The appointees are Donald R. Richberg, former NRA administrator, named chairman of the committee of commerce, and Jesse R. Smith, who will serve on Richberg's committee. The posts were announced by Frank J. Hogan, newly-elected association president, also of the District.

Swiss Romance to End Soon in Wedding Here

Romance which began last year in Switzerland neared the altar here yesterday when Frederick M. Clark, 25, a Government worker, applied for a marriage license, naming his fiancee as Angele M. Blandin, 24, of Grand Saconnex, Geneva, Switzerland.

Sometime next month Miss Blandin, whom he met last winter as she was working in her native land, will journey to Washington and be married to Clark. The Rev. Howard S. Anderson, pastor of the First Congregational Church, will probably perform the ceremony.

Increase Shown In Factory Jobs

Miss Perkins, Secretary of Labor, reported yesterday that factory employment had increased by 40,000 in July and that weekly factory pay rolls had increased by $500,000.

Miss Perkins said the report marked a definite improvement in the employment situation and that it was the first employment gain shown in any month since September, 1937.

"Gains of 0.7 per cent in factory employment and of 0.4 per cent in pay rolls were reported, although factory employment normally declines by about 1 per cent and pay rolls by about 4 per cent in July," the Secretary said. "Nonagricultural employment usually declines by about 140,000 workers in July."

Berry Asserts 'Levy' on WPA Defeated Him

Tennessean Lodges Formal Complaint With Senate Funds Committee.

Senator Berry, the President's former Industrial Co-ordinator recently defeated for renomination in Tennessee's senatorial primaries, yesterday charged that "gutter politics" involving WPA contributed to his defeat.

In a formal complaint filed with the Senate Campaign Expenditures Committee, Berry said WPA employes in Tennessee were assessed $125,000 to raise a campaign fund to unseat him.

He declared two State WPA officials "were in fact, but not in name, the campaign directors of the coalition ticket" which defeated him. He alleged "it has been said" that these officials raised slush funds by assessments and collections from WPA and relief workers and suggested "this can be sustained" by sworn questioning of the officials before the committee.

Quotes Walsh.

In charging "gutter politics," he reiterated the words of Senator Walsh (Democrat), of Massachusetts, before the primary, that the Tennessee campaign involved "the worst kind of gutter politics."

"I wish to sustain Senator Walsh in his declaration, because with but one exception I have known of no recent primary that so nearly approached the characterization given by Senator Walsh as that so-called Democratic primary recently held in the State of Tennessee," said Senator Berry.

Berry may carry his fight to the Senate floor. Chairman Sheppard, of the Senate Campaign Expenditures Committee, said his communication would be forwarded to committee investigators now in Tennessee for inquiry. The next full committee meeting is scheduled around September 1, and the investigator's findings may be reported at that time.

Recently Sheppard turned over to Works Progress Administrator Hopkins committee findings of WPA interference in politics in Kentucky, for Hopkins to investigate and report back to the committee. Hopkins previously had substantiated only two charges of WPA politics in Kentucky. Sheppard has said the committee will ask Hopkins to tell what he intends to do in those cases substantiated.

The Berry charges may be followed up by the defeated Senator in challenging the seating of Tom Stewart, who was supported by Former Representative E. E. Crump's strong Memphis machine in his successful campaign. The Campaign Expenditures Committee plans a detailed report to the Senate on all of its findings, and the evidence will be available to the Senate Elections Committee.

Senator Berry's complaint said charges of WPA campaign assessments had been ignored by Hopkins. He accused WPA of expending pay rolls in Tennessee in July by "many thousands" and asserted the WPA in Tennessee gave jobs to persons who were not eligible for relief and did not need it, but "who possessed certain political influences."

Charges Threats.

He further charged that "solicitations and collections were made in the City of Washington among Tennesseans employed in the Federal service, both in and out of the Civil Service category."

"Visits were made by persons to departments, and the threat of coercion and intimidation was imposed in order to secure moneys, all of which were used in the Democratic primary in behalf of the coalition ticket," he said.

He denied that he himself solicited, received or accepted from any Federal or State employe "one penny" for his own campaign. He said he offered the statement "in the interest of decency in political matters" and denied it was "because of any disappointment on my part.

"I am firmly convinced of the existence of the conditions to which reference has been made, and I offer the suggestion that it is unnatural and an indecent procedure," he said. "Obviously, for the reasons stated, none could accept the results of this so-called Democratic primary as representative of Democratic principles in any degree whatsoever."

Berry, former head of Labor's Non-Partisan League, was appointed to the Senate in the midst of the Supreme Court fight by Gov. Browning. He voted generally with the Administration, but opposed "wasteful" New Deal spending. His unsuccessful attempt to win TVA compensation for marble deposits taken over in Tennessee Valley development won him the nickname of "Marbles" Berry and the whole incident was used against him in the campaign.

Lewis to Meet U.A.W. Factions In Last Parley

Martin and Thomas Called to Conference Today in Climax of Row.

Lengthy negotiations, in which Chairman John L. Lewis of the Committee for Industrial Organization is attempting to heal a factional fight for control of the United Auto Workers union, neared a climax last night when Homer Martin and R. J. Thomas, United Automobile Workers officials, were summoned to a final conference today with Lewis.

The struggle for power in which United Automobile Workers President Martin and Vice President Thomas claim they are battling communistic influences in the C. I. O. ended in deadlock last night after a fruitless see-saw all day.

Richard Frankenstein, leader of the "outs," and nine other representatives of that faction saw Lewis yesterday for two hours after the burly labor chieftain had conferred just as long with Thomas and two other Martin aides.

Martin promised Thomas by long-distance telephone last night he would arrive here early today for the session.

Lewis was blandly noncommittal after both sessions yesterday. He told newsmen, "I met with the committees. One brought me up to date regarding their Toledo conference of last Saturday, which they asserted was attended by 702 delegates who, they claimed, represent about 244,000 members of the Auto Workers.

"The other group brought me up to date in respect to their point of view."

Lewis was asked by the Frankensteen delegation to oust Martin and appoint a C.I.O. director for the automobile union. They also seek a national convention, where they are confident they can outvote Martin's cohorts.

Monopoly Inquiry Begins Study Of Patents With Subpenas' Aid

Committeemen, Praising Co-operation of Business Firms, Gain Power to Examine Books, Records, Correspondence of Firms.

Investigators for the Government's Joint Monopoly Committee took the field yesterday with subepas, apparently armed with power to examine industrial data on patents and insurance company security transactions.

How much broader was the inquisitorial authority given the agents, spokesmen for the joint committee declined to say, but it was definitely learned no subpena had been drawn on oil or steel firms.

Committeemen emphasized that the subpenas already issued were largely a matter of routine, and contemplated no general commandeering of industrial information.

"We are not going to use the subpenas to haul a lot of books and records back to Washington," one official said. "It is probable that the subpenas will be entirely unneeded. We are meeting co-operation generally in our efforts to elicit necessary information."

It was recently learned that Justice Department, Commerce Department and Federal Trade Commission representatives on the committee planned to open their monopoly inquiry with the first all-inclusive study of patents ever undertaken by the Government.

Previously Chairman William O. Douglas of the Securities and Exchange Commission had disclosed that his agency would lead off with a study of private placements of entire blocs of corporate securities with insurance companies, and later go into the whole field of investment banking. Douglas had said there was substantial evidence that some corporations were avoiding security registrations by the legal expedient of offering an entire issue to insurance companies seeking investments.

The Justice Department has already launched a groundwork study of patents, which it believes are a substantial factor in many of the larger monopolies. Subjects to be explored may include patent suppression through so-called "company graveyards."

C. of C. to Assist In Curbing Crime

Philip C. Ebeling, president of the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce, announced yesterday after a conference with J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, that the 450 local chambers would co-operate with the F. B. I. in extending use of fingerprinting and would assist local police forces in establishing training schools.

"Young men must live with the problems of today longer than our elders; therefore it is important that we come in contact with affairs of the National Government, which is assuming a larger part in the solution of these problems," he said.

Utility Charged With Attempt To Block TVA

Chairman of Chattanooga's Power Project Tells of Companies' Fight.

By the Associated Press.

Chattanooga, Tenn., Aug. 23.—L. J. Wilhoite, acting chairman of Chattanooga's municipal electric power board, charged before a Congressional TVA investigating committee today that the Tennessee Electric Power Co. and its allies had "deliberately attempted to dynamite" a public power program here.

Tennessee Electric Power Co. is an important unit in Commonwealth & Southern Corporation's far-flung chain of power companies.

Wilhoite, dairyman who as a youth worked for the local power company, described methods he said were used to obtain signatures to a ptition for a referendum to prohibit erection of power lines and poles on streets where there now are distribution facilities.

Employes Active.

Wilhoite did not directly charge the Tennessee Electric Power Co. was sponsoring the referendum but said members of his staff saw power company employes circulating the petition of a supplemental registration of voters last month.

He said some voters were told that signing the petition was only incidental to registering. Others, he said, were informed it was merely a move to prohibit a type of bond which would make taxpayers liable if operations of the power board were unprofitable.

The power board chairman was the first witness here, the hearing having been brought to Chattanooga from Knoxville today.

He told the committee board engineers estimated $7,127,437 as the cost of a system duplicating the power company's Chattanooga facilities. He added, the board had offered Tennessee Electric Power $6,200,000 for its distribution system and transmission lines here.

Offer Rejected.

The offer was rejected, he said, by Wendell Willkie, head of Commonwealth & Southern.

It was possible, observers believed, that the close examination of Wilhoite concerning Tennessee Power Co. activities paved the way for later questioning of Willkie. It is probable he will testify in Washington in early autumn.

Senator Donahey (Democrat), of Ohio, committee chairman, said Representative Barden (Democrat), of North Carolina, had been appointed to the committee to fill a vacancy left by Representative Driver (Democrat), of Arkansas, who resigned yesterday.

Coroner Calls Hunger Cells 'Black Holes'

Hunger

rest of the man who turned the heat valves than in the identity of the persons "higher up" who gave the order.

The coroner emerged from a four-hour visit to the prison "disgusted" with what he described as a "disgrace to any decent prison."

Hersch assumed virtual command of the prison under an 1819 act of the Assembly which extends that privilege to coroners.

Died By Scalding.

"There is no question," he said, "but that these men met their death by scalding. Their hands were shriveled, indicating immersion in not water or steam."

Persons who accompanied Hersch into the prison refused to be quoted but described several prisoners as "eager" to tell of freezing in winter time as a disciplinary measure, and in the summer time red-hot radiator pipes and streams of icy water.

The cells he visited are known in prison parlance as "Klondike cells," narrow, dark and equipped with only a bowl and a water spigot. In two of them four men were found battered to death early Monday in an abrupt end to a riotous five-day hunger strike against the monotony of prison fare.

Fight Doubtful.

Hersch entered the prison as three other investigations got under way under the direction of the city homicide squad, the district attorney's office and the State department of welfare.

Hersch ridiculed a police report which supported Supt. William B. Mills' theory that the men were injured fatally in fighting among themselves.

Asked whether the men had received the "hot-water cure"—an extreme disciplinary measure in which live steam or boiling water is used—Hersch replied quickly that he had "every bit of evidence necessary to get to the bottom of this situation."

The naked bodies of the four victims were found in the small cells where the leaders of 650 original hunger strikers were confined after their number had been reduced to a dozen, whom Mills described as "agitators." The strike began Wednesday night in protest against the monotony of fried eggplant, hamburger and macaroni.

The four dead men—Joseph Walters, 28, serving 20 to 50 years for burglary; Frank Comodeca, 46, 10 to 20 years for burglary; Harry Osborne, 22, 10 years for larcency, and Joseph McQuade, 26, 3 years for larceny—were "discovered" by two men who shared with them the pair of "Klondike" cells. Joseph Forte, 24, and Morris Spatz, said they awoke Monday morning to find their cellmates dead.

Relatives who visited the county morgue to view the dead men said they were so disfigured and battered that it was difficult to identify them.

Joseph Comodeca, brother of Frank, said "his head was flattened out as though he had been hit with a sledge hammer. All their bodies looked as though they had been scalded with steam."

He said that three weeks ago he visited his brother in the prison and that Frank complained the food was "terrible" and expressed a willingness to spend the rest of his life in any other prison. He was eligible for parole in 1970.

Michael McQuade, father of James, said his son's skull was smashed and "his eyes were clear out of his head."

No one appeared to identify Walters, whose home was in Pittsburgh.

Mrs. Cara Stevens Wills 4 Relatives $230,000 Estate

A personal estate of $230,228.58 was left by Mrs. Cara de la Montagnie Hall Stevens, widow of Rear Admiral Thomas W. Stevens, of the United States Navy, it was shown in District Court yesterday when a petition for probate of her will was filed. Mrs. Stevens died at 85, in Hyannis, Mass., August 15.

A major portion of the estate was made up of stocks valued at $207,997.40, and jewelry.

Bequests of $1,000 each were made to St. Alban's Church, to the Rev. G. C. F. Bratenahl, former dean of the Washington Cathedral, and to her brother, Herbert Oakley Hall, of Santa Barbara, Calif.

Mrs. Stevens, who, while in Washington, lived at the Stoneleigh Court Apartments, named a niece and three nephews to receive the rest of the estate. Nine Arrested Here As Dope Venders On Street Corners

Following days of investigation Federal agents and District police took their first step last night in smashing a narcotics ring which has been selling packets of heroin on downtown street corners. Nine suspects, including one woman, were arrested.

The woman and three of the men face charges of possession and sale of the narcotics; the others are being held for further investigation.

Police Say Three Admit Part in Kidnap-Beating

Olympia, Wash., Aug. 23 (U.P.).—Prosecuting Attorney Smith Troy announced tonight that he had obtained "full confessions" from three of the four men accused in the kidnaping and attempted mutilation of 37-year-old Irving Baker, who was beaten because of his alleged attentions to the young wife of a middle-aged society doctor.

Troy said James Reddick, a taxicab driver; Robert W. Smith, a Grays Harbor district dairyman, and William McAloon, former night town marshal of nearby Montesano, had admitted complicity in the kidnap-attack, which allegedly was led by Dr. K. W. Berry, 54.

Dr. Berry's 27-year-old wife, Elizabeth Berry, a former University of Washington co-ed, admitted there was "reason for jealousy" on the part of her husband, but said she would stand by him.

Baker, physicians said, suffered no permanent effects from the attack.

Precinct, Courtland D. Ferguson, president of the alumni group, told Commissioner Hazen:

"We regret very much to learn that there is some doubt as to his (Capt. Miller's) ability to accept this scholarship due to a legal technicality regarding his pay while attending the Traffic Safety Institute."

$1,500 Needed.

(Miller was not permitted to accept the offer under a ruling by Auditor Dan Donovan, which prohibits payment of his salary during the 8 months' course.)

"We feel that Capt. Miller's attendance at the university would be a tremendous benefit to the District," Ferguson continued, "and we sincerely urge you to do everything in your power to make his attendance possible."

Approximately $1,500 is needed to cover Capt. Miller's salary while he is away, said Maj. Ernest W. Brown, police superintendent. Miller has agreed to sacrifice his annual leave for the balance of this year and all of next to take care of at least three months of the salary period, Brown added.

At the same time yesterday, Maj. Brown expressed dissatisfaction with results of the current safety program. He called for greater cooperation on the part of pedestrians, emphasizing the fact they are apparently failing to "do their part."

"We are still having too many accidents and persons are still being killed," said Maj. Brown. "It is evident that something is wrong—and I feel it is a lack of responsibility on the part of pedestrians."

He urged also that motorists using one-way streets become familiar with a new regulation governing left turns. Under a rule adopted by the Commissioners, all vehicles making left turns must keep well to the left and drive to the center of intersections before turning.

The popular practice of "cutting corners," he said, will not be tolerated.

Plan Explained.

The new plan to organize motorists for safety on a Nation-wide scale was explained by William Sabine, one of the movement's local sponsors:

"The private motorist has been unorganized and heretofore has done little or nothing for his own protection and self-interest," said Sabine. "The present campaign to bring together owners and operators of private passenger automobiles has been undertaken to meet this need for united action.

"Organized Motorists, Inc.," he added, "has been chartered for this purpose. It is a non-profit association. It is not subsidized by any special interest. It is not affiliated with any group inside or outside the automotive industry. It stands on its own feet. Its officers and directors are men of high standing. Executive offices will be opened in Washington and regional offices and committees are contemplated as the association grows."

Only two accidents were reported on District streets yesterday. Lloyd R. Morton, 41, of Hyattsville, Md., suffered undetermined head injuries when the car in which he was riding was struck from the rear by a truck. He was treated at Providence Hospital. James A. Parker, colored, 22, driver of the truck, was charged with operating with a bad hand brake.

In the second mishap, Thomas R. Clifton, 24, of 1523 Isherwood street northeast, and John E. Shreve, 23, of 3990 Livingston road northeast, received slight injuries when their car overturned after striking a tree.

Both were treated at St. Elizabeths Hospital for head and body lacerations.

New Deal Held Still Supreme Court Foe

Representative Guyer, of Kansas, ranking Republican member of the House Judiciary Committee, charged yesterday that President Roosevelt and "the New Dealers" had not abandoned their plans to "embarrass the Supreme Court" but were attempting to weaken it by putting through Congress a "New Deal Court of Appeals" which would have jurisdiction in "all matters concerning decrees, orders and decisions of these New Deal agencies."

He said the bill, introduced by Senator Logan (Democrat) of Kentucky, "would make the Executive, through his appointing power (for members of the cart) the arbitrary master of industry and labor along the whole gamut of administrative authority.

By the Associated Press.

The Navy announced yesterday its civilian motor truck drivers in three cities led all other competitors in a six months' safety contest, conducted by the National Safety Council, Chicago.

Drivers of the Mare Island, Calif., and Puget Sound, Wash., Navy yards won from 44 competitors operating large fleets of trucks, and the Boston, Mass., yard captured the award for the small fleet group with a perfect safety record.

The Washington, Philadelphia, Boston and Puget Sound yards had perfect scores for passenger vehicles, and received honorable mention.

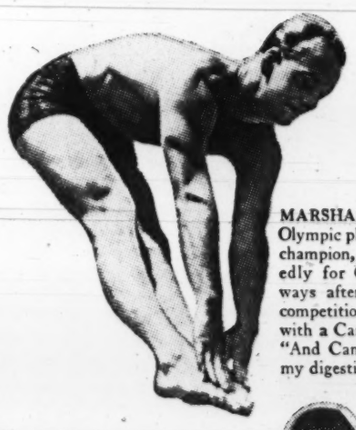
ONE SMOKER TELLS ANOTHER:

"GET A LIFT WITH A CAMEL!"

"IT'S CAMELS FOR ME!" declares Jane Fauntz Manske, whose brilliant diving has brought her national fame. She adds: "After a diving exhibition when I feel exhausted, I welcome the 'lift' in energy I get with a Camel. Camels give me a swell sense of well-being—especially during and after meals. Camels certainly add to the joy of living. They're so mild and fine-flavored!"

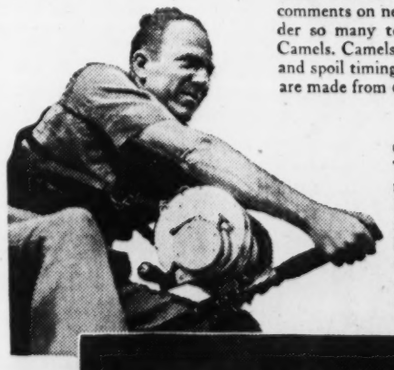


MARSHALL WAYNE, Olympic platform diving champion, speaks decidedly for Camels. "Always after a strenuous competition I get a 'lift' with a Camel," he says. "And Camels sure help my digestion along."

AQUAPLANING IS FUN but exhausting too. That's one reason why Gloria Wheeden appreciates Camels. She says: "When I feel draggy, a Camel gives my energy a 'lift.' And Camels are mild, yet full-flavored."

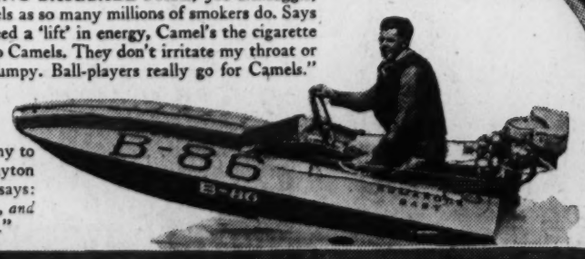
RALPH GULDAHL, twice winner of U.S. Open golf crown, says: "One thing about Camels is the quick 'lift' in energy they give. Camels never jangle my nerves. Camels are milder too—easy on my throat. I've always liked the rich Camel flavor."

MRS. ETHEL ARNOLD, tennis star, comments on nerve control—"No wonder so many tennis champions prefer Camels. Camels don't upset the nerves and spoil timing. I'm convinced Camels are made from COSTLIER TOBACCOS!"



CAMELS "FOR DIGESTION'S SAKE," appeal to noted game-fish angler Erl Roman, as well as the "lift" in energy Camels give him. He sums up Camel's advantages with: "I get more fun out of life, smoking Camels. I've smoked them 18 years."

HEAVY-HITTING BASEBALL STAR, Joe DiMaggio, feels about Camels as so many millions of smokers do. Says Joe: "When I need a 'lift' in energy, Camel's the cigarette for me. I stick to Camels. They don't irritate my throat or get my nerves jumpy. Ball-players really go for Camels."



DOWN THE HUDSON—Albany to New York—in 3½ hours. Clayton Bishop, outboard racing star, says: "Camels never ruffle my nerves, and they give my energy a swell lift."

SWIMMING RECORDS fall before Lenore Kight Wingard's expert strokes—national and world marks. Lenore prefers Camels, which hold a record too—America's largest-selling cigarette of all time. Lenore remarks: "When I feel taut after a meet, a Camel helps ease the tension. Another thing—Camels are so mild—they never irritate my throat."

Alien Inquiry Starts Junket To Hollywood

munism at Brooklyn College, drafted a letter, released last night, asking President Roosevelt to direct Federal agencies to aid the inquiry.

In the letter to President Roosevelt, Dies asserted the committee had "definite proof" the Justice Department and the WPA carried investigators for the Senate Civil Liberties Committee on their payrolls, and thus "clearly established precedent."

Dies claimed widespread "popular demand" for the investigation to continue, but did not say on what he based this impression.

While Shirley Temple is expected to deny vigorously that she is a Communist "front," the Dies committee, taking no chances, may confront the diminutive prima donna for proof. The "grilling" may also include such lovely stars as Bette Davis, Miriam Hopkins, Gale Sondergaard, Gloria Stuart, Nancy Carroll, Joan Crawford, Luise Rainer and Sylvia Sidney, all named before the committee as "fronts" in Hollywood for the Communists.

So committee members smacked their lips yesterday in contemplating the joys of the pursuit of the truth.

Inquiring As to Bridges.

The West Coast inquiry will include investigation of charges that high officials of the Labor Department aided and advised Harry Bridges, president, National Maritime Union, an affiliate of the Committee for Industrial Organization, when deportation proceedings were pending against him. "We're after that angle," said Dies, rubbing ashes off his cigar on the edge of the huge oak committee-table.

Asked why the charges against the Labor Department officials would be pursued in California, when the men in question are here, Dies said that the "evidence we want" is on the West Coast.

Dies would not reveal exactly where or when the sub-committees will suddenly appear on the scene in California, the Middle West or the Eastern Nazi camps.

Professors Testify.

Before adjourning temporarily, the committee heard Professors Edward Fenlon, Martin Meyer and Earl A. Martin of Brooklyn College, Brooklyn, N. Y., describe alleged "Communistic activities" at that college. These seemed mainly to consist of student and faculty opposition to establishment of a unit of the Reserve Officers Training Corps at the school, and of the appointment of "liberal" men to the school's board of higher education.

Insisting that the word "liberal" is now meaningless, Representative Starnes (Democrat), of Alabama, later described Thomas Mann, the famous German, author exiled by Nazis, as "a well-known Communist."

Miss Margaret Kerr, secretary, the Better America Federation of California, concluded the morning session by presenting a three-foot stack of documents which she said described factually radical activities everywhere. Among these, she noted, was a document proving that David Saposs, economist, National Labor Relations Board, sponsored a radical play presented here at the Washington Almas Temple, 1315 K street northwest, by the Brookwood Players of Brookwood Labor College. She said the play was a Communist production.

Hawks

Gwinn, president of the Gwinn Aircar Corporation, said.

"Hawks was demonstrating the craft to Campbell," he continued. "Wind conditions were against them. They had to take off the long way of the field and apparently they were up in the air before they saw the wires and it was too late to avoid them."

Goes in for "Safety."

About a year ago Hawks indicated he was through with speed, the flying which made him famous. He said he was going in for "safety" and "comfort." The noted flyer took a position as vice president of the Aircar corporation and came to Buffalo yesterday on business.

Hawks, a native of Marshalltown, Iowa, won renown in February, 1929, when he and a mechanic flew nonstop from Los Angeles to New York in 18 hours 21 minutes for a new transcontinental record.

For the next five years he was continually in the headlines with breath-taking exhibitions of speed flying that brought him a claim to 214 point-to-point records in North America and Europe. Time after time he had narrow brushes with death but only once before his fatal crackup was he injured seriously. That was in Worcester, Mass., when he crashed in a takeoff and spent weeks recovering in a Boston hospital.

First Flew in 1916.

One of his greatest aerial achievements was a flight from Los Angeles to New York, June 2, 1933, in 13 hours 26 minutes, a record that still compares favorably with other record flights for the 2,500-mile distance with the exception of a single trip by Howard Hughes.

He was the son of Charles Monroe and Ida Mae Hawks. He was graduated from Long Beach, Calif., high school and turned to aviation in 1916. He entered the United States Air Service in 1917, during the World War and served as instructor until March, 1919, ranking lieutenant commander in the Navy Reserve air force.

He once entertained hopes of being the first flier to make a nonstop hop to Paris, but when Charles A. Lindbergh accomplished this, Hawks turned to speed.

Was Noted Glider Pilot.

Fast airplanes, Hawks once said, promoted the primary value of aviation—speed; gliders and gliding, he explained, contained all the fundamentals of flight and provided all the necessary stimulus for flying as a profession or sport.

Hawks was distinguished as a glider pilot, once flying such a craft, in tow of an airplane, from San Diego to New York, saying that he did so to focus attention on gliding as a logical first step for training airmen.

Outstanding among his trips was one from Detroit to New York, 640 miles, in two hour 41 minutes, averaging about 255 miles an hour, then an unofficial world record for speed and distance.

Once he flew from Philadelphia to New York, 90 miles in 20 minutes, averaging 4½ miles per minute.

Outstanding U. S. Flier.

In 1930 he was awarded the Harmon trophy, given annually to the Nation's outstanding aviator, and the Ligue Internationale des Aviateurs named him America's outstanding flier.

The Sioux Indians made him an honorary chief in 1931.

It was by a ruse that the lanky Hawks as a youth took to the airlanes. As a schoolboy at Long Beach, he posed as a newspaper reporter offering publicity in return for a free flight with a barnstorming aviator.

When he came back down he confessed, and the pilot, struck by his interest in flying, made him a ground assistant. Prior to this incident Hawks had considered a stage career, appearing with a stock company in Minneapolis.

He deserted from the sophomore class at the University of California to go to war and became a commissioned officer while still in his teens. After the war, when he became more skilled in his avocation, he was called into consultation repeatedly to discuss aeronautic problems with Government officials.

Flew All Over World.

Hawks married in 1918 Newell Lane, from whom he later was divorced. He married Edith Bowie, of Weatherford, Tex., in 1927. He had one daughter, Dolly, by his first wife.

In 1931 Hawks flew with Will Rogers, who was killed in an airplane in Alaska with Wiley Post, on a tour of the country in behalf of the Red Cross.

His friendship with Rogers led him later on another aerial pilgrimage—a 40-day tour in which he covered 25,000 miles in the interests of the Will Rogers memorial fund.

In recent years he had devoted time to the efforts to have the first Wright airplane returned to the United States from a London museum. He thought it should be placed in the Smithsonian Institution, Washington, and was vice president of the Association of Men With Wings, which is interested in this project.

His love for aviation led Hawks to China, to South America, and all over Europe, attempting to promote flying. Associates said he was never happier than when he was at the controls of a speedy ship.

Is $250,000 to End Estate Claim Gift Or Not? Asks U. S.

A question whether Mrs. Lorraine Manville Gould Dresselhuys of New York and London received her money's worth when she paid her former husband $250,000 to waive certain rights in her $4,400,000 estate was raised today before the Board of Tax Appeals.

In a petition asking a redetermination of a claimed deficiency of $44,303 in gift taxes for 1936, Mrs. Dresselhuys contended a check for $250,000 made out to her former husband, Camilo Aldao, in February 1936, was not a gift but a consideration demanded by Aldao for a waiver of rights in her estate.

The Internal Revenue Bureau, however, contended Mrs. Dresselhuys did not receive adequate value in "money or money's worth" for the check and therefore it was subject to tax as a gift.

Blum Approves Suspension of 40-Hour Week

French Socialist Warns Premier Not to Drop Idea Permanently.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Paris, Aug. 23.—Support from an unexpected quarter appeared today for Premier Daladier in his campaign to obtain a modification of France's 40-hour week, in order to augment the nation's production. Writing in the Socialist organ, Le Populaire, former Premier Blum, while warning Daladier against touching the social reforms of the Popular Front government, implies a qualified approval of the prime minister's action.

"We do not seek to exploit against Edouard Daladier the difficulties which he has created for himself," writes Blum. "The hour is too grave for that. But it is necessary that he be warned if he has not already been. For a repeal of the social legislation or for a reversal of attitude toward the working class, let him not count on the Socialist Party."

Wording Is Subtle.

Blum is a master of subtle verbiage, which can be interpreted in several ways, and his editorial in Le Populaire today, had political circles guessing just where the Socialist leader stood in regard to Daladier's latest move.

The general interpretation put on his article is that if Daladier does not attempt to obtain a repeal of the 40-hour law (in his radio speech Sunday night he expressly disclaimed intention of suppressing the law) Blum will not strenuously oppose an adaptation of the law to permit industries making munitions to produce an output equal to Germany's.

Blum, in his article, does justice to the sincerity of Daladier's motive. "I do not think I am mistaking the motives, nor the aim of the premier," writes Blum. "What he is seeking to prevent is a monetary crisis that will impede the action of France in an international crisis. This anxiety is only too natural, and Daladier can ascertain that we share his worries."

Nevertheless, Blum gives Daladier a serious warning against precipitating a domestic, political crisis by provoking a rupture of the Popular Front at the present time. "By the force of things," the Socialist leader observes, "Daladier's new social orientation will lead to a new political orientation. Already the satisfaction given to the reactionary press campaign against the 40-hour week isolates Daladier from a part of his majority, as it has separated him from some of his ministers.

Urges Social Justice.

"Does he believe," inquires Blum, "that social harmony plays a slighter role in producing confidence than capital in the balance of the exchange market? Does he not see that France can act more effectively in an international crisis if it is a France of the Popular Front—a France which has a sense of social justice strongly allied with a conception of patriotic duty?"

The first political skirmish will be fought Friday when the parliamentary delegation of Popular Front parties will hold a meeting preceded by a meeting of the Socialist Party. The Communists will undoubtedly press for an extraordinary session of Parliament to debate Daladier's project and it remains to be seen whether they will be supported by the Socialists, who recently rejected a similar effort. That was before Daladier moved to modify the 40-hour week and competition with the Communists for the favors of the workers may induce the Socialists to change tactics.

Jouhaux Asks Peace.

Copyright, 1938, New York Tribune, Inc.

New York, Aug. 23 (U.P.)—Leon Jouhaux, leader of the powerful French General Labor Confederation, said tonight that he will urge President Roosevelt to convoke an international peace conference to study co-operation between governments of democracies "such as has already been realized between workers of these democracies."

The French labor leader, nominal head of 5,000,000 French workers and regarded as one of the most authoritative spokesmen for labor in his country, arrived aboard the liner Paris on his way to the Latin-American labor conference in Mexico City.

Referring to the present controversy in France over the desire of Premier Daladier to extend the 40-hour week to a 48-hour week on a basis of national emergency, Jouhaux said:

"We have always examined all questions and we never have refused to do so, but we do not want to touch the principle of the 40-hour week."

'I Like England'

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

WILLIAM HALE THOMPSON, former mayor of Chicago, exhibits fish he caught in the vicinity of Toronto, Canada. Once "Big Bill" did not like any part of England, particularly King George V, but now he has a summer home in Canada. "I think Canada is magnificent," said the former Anglophobe.

Arabs Create 'Ghost State' In Holy Land

Jerusalem (Correspondence of the Associated Press).—Tales of the birth of a ghost-like "independent Arab nation" run by chieftains fighting for the "freedom of our race" are filtering down from the Holy Land hills.

These tales are increasing even as Palestine talks of the possibility of a peace pact to end the 28 months of guerrilla warfare between Arabs and Jews who claim this British mandated land as their home.

Reports here and in Cairo say Egypt's Moslem premier, Mohamed Mahmoud, has urged that the former Mufti of Palestine, Haj Amin Effendi Al Husseini, meet Dr. Chaim Weizmann, World Zionist leader, in some neutral city where a peace agreement might be drafted.

Some of the stories of the formation of a hidden "Arab nation" are told by peasants who have been captured by hillmen and released. Others are brought back by police or British military intelligence agents.

All Palestine, the stories have it, is divided by the Arab chieftains into three districts—north, central and south—and at the head of each region is a "commanding officer" with sub-officers and a spy service.

Each district has a military court to deal with Arab peoples and with victims of their raids. Civil courts of the hidden nation administer to the needs of the hillmen. Verdicts of death are carried out by a firing squad.

A loose military organization has its signal corps, medical corps and commissary. Over the three regions presides a board of higher strategy. Men, munitions, supplies and money are said to be smuggled into Palestine from bordering states, where strategists of the nation are in hiding.

Officers attached to the British forces often have praised tactics of the Arabs and expressed the belief that some well-trained leader, perhaps a former World War officer, is directing the maneuvers of the Arab "armies."

The Egyptian premier is believed to have inaugurated fresh moves to settle the Palestine question in a conference in London at the end of July with Malcolm MacDonald, British minister of colonies. Scarcely a week had passed before MacDonald, on August 6 and 7, made a flying visit to Palestine to confer with various leaders.

Italy Formally Admits Recent Aid to Franco

Regulars Replacing Militia, Rome Says; Britain's Pact Hope Killed.

By the United Press.

London, Aug. 23.—The Italian government has formally admitted to the British charge d'affaires in Rome that it has been sending new reinforcements of Fascist legionnaires and war materials to the insurgent armies in Spain, it was disclosed tonight.

Italy said "drafts" of officers and soldiers of the Italian regular army have been sent to Spain to replace blackshirt volunteers killed and wounded in recent fighting.

Premier Mussolini's outright admission of his increased military participation in the Spanish conflict served to rip away remaining shreds of the fiction of "non-intervention" and threatened to deliver a knockout blow to the Anglo-Italian pact of friendship.

Ciano Made Admission.

Unimpeachable sources revealed that Italy's admission was made by Count Ciano, Italian foreign minister and son-in-law of Il Duce, to British Charge d'Affaires Sir Noel Charles.

Italy's announcement capped a crisis caused by insurgent Gen. Franco's rejection of the 27-nation plan for removing all foreign "volunteers" from Spain as the best means of preventing the conflict from developing into a general European war.

This announcement from Italy cast deep gloom among British diplomats, who received it when they were groping for some means—however slender—of salvaging some part of the laboriously constructed "volunteers" plan dashed by Franco's refusal to give up his Italian, German and other foreign mercenaries under the terms laid down by the London Non-Intervention Committee.

Pact Hope Shattered.

Many informed observers predicted that hope of putting into effect the Anglo-Italian pact of friendship—keystone of Prime Minister Chamberlain's "realistic" foreign policy—has been shattered.

The pact, initialed in Rome last Easter time, contained a proviso that it could not come into operation until Mussolini had liquidated his military commitments in Spain. Chamberlain has told Parliament on several occasions that Britain is insistent upon fulfillment of these terms before implementing the agreement.

A study of the pact revealed, however, that it contains no definite pledge by Italy to refrain from sending reinforcements to Spain, although such an interpretation was placed upon it in the "spirit" of the agreement.

Britain feared Mussolini's admission might force the French government to accede to leftist demands and throw open its Pyrenees frontier to arms shipments to the loyalists.

Rebels Shift Attack.

Hendaye, France (at Spanish frontier), Aug. 23 (A.P.)—Spanish insurgent armies shifted their main assault today from the dead-locked southern and eastern fronts to the Tagus River area on the central front, 90 miles southwest of Madrid.

Insurgent armies there were reported advancing rapidly. Since the movement began Sunday, insurgents said, their troops occupied the Talavera-Merida highway on the 6-mile stretch between La Nava de Ricomaltillo and Campillo, and pushed on eastward to dominate several miles along the highway to Toledo, 50 miles to the northeast.

China Reports 2 Regiments Slain by Gas

Discord at Home Revealed by Order Dissolving Red Organizations.

Nanchang, Hupeh Province (Wednesday), Aug. 24 (U.P.).—Chinese reports said today that two Chinese regiments were wiped out by poison gas east of Juichang. Only two wounded survivors were said to have reached Juichang.

Discord Behind Lines.

By the Associated Press.

Hankow, Aug. 23.—Discord behind China's united resistance was brought into the open today by an order of Gen. Chiang Kai-shek's chief of staff dissolving proletarian organizations inspired or sponsored by Chinese Communists.

Gen. Chen Cheng, as political and military boss of the Wuhan metropolitan area—Wuchang, Hankow and Hanyang—ordered dissolution of the National Salvation Corps, National Emancipation Vanguards and other student and worker organizations deemed under Communist sway.

The order explained that Gen. Chen considered it imperative that all political and patriotic organizations be co-ordinated to eliminate overlapping activities and guarantee efficiency.

He said the organizations now dissolved had refused to comply with moves to that end.

Hankow's leftist press assailed the action, charging that it violated the spirit of a peace agreement which ended a decade of struggle between the Kuomintang (Nationalist Party) and Chinese Communists shortly before the war with Japan began.

This agreement paved the way for organization of the united front against Japan, the newspapers said.

Chinese Communist leaders, however, were believed unlikely to make a major issue of the difficulties of subsidiary sympathizing groups in this area.

Communist leaders are fully occupied with efforts to sabotage the Japanese military structure in North China and with organizing the Chinese populace behind the lines.

Medical Men Conscripted.

Tokyo (Wednesday), Aug. 24 (U.P.). Imperial ordinances requiring the registration of physicians, pharmacists, nurses and technicians in accordance with the mobilization law were promulgated today.

GIRL COOL WHILE MAN BURNS—And Gunther's saves the day!

CARNIVAL BE HANGED! IT'S TOO HOT FOR THIS NONSENSE.
NOW, DAD!
NOW DAD, NOTHING. I'M BURNING UP!
THEN COME ALONG AND I'LL SHOW YOU HOW THE V.F.D. PUTS OUT THAT KIND OF FIRE.
JUST TRY THIS GUNTHER'S BEER. IT'LL COOL YOUR PIPES. IT'S DRY, AND BEER-Y.

YEP! THE V.F.D. RECOMMENDS DRY, BEER-Y BEER FOR BURNING THROATS.
THEN YOU'D BETTER TAKE HOME A CASE FOR EMERGENCIES, DAD.

"It's GREAT To Be THIRSTY—
If There's DRY, BEER-Y BEER Around!"

When your throat is like Sahara and it seems nothing could ever cool it off and quench that terrific thirst—man, oh man, it's good to see a cold bottle of Gunther's Beer!

Then's when you can honestly say it's great to be thirsty, because you just know the dry, beer-y beer is going to make quenching that thirst a real pleasure.

And are you right! The cold beer is so refreshingly dry and so tantalizingly beer-y thirst disappears. You feel so good you take another swallow right away. Yes sir! It's real beer!

Do you know why Gunther's Beer is so different?

It's a big difference described by the words "dry and beer-y." Dry means it's zestful and not sweet. Beer-y means peak of perfection in real beer flavor. Gunther's put that beer-y flavor into its beer by using an unusually high percentage of choice Bohemian hops.

More expensive? Yes, but domestic hops alone can't make a real beer-y beer. So Gunther's use an unusually high percentage of imported hops and sell a great deal more beer.

No wonder Gunther's—dry, light-bodied and beer-y—is so overwhelmingly popular! Why not keep a few bottles on ice? Then you'll know why it's great to be thirsty!

Hines Got $500 A Week to Halt Raids, Jury Told

Hines

Mrs. Hines, wife of the defandant, sat in the courtroom this afternoon. Mrs. Dewey, wife of the prosecutor, had the seat directly behind her.

The gangster's story of a "fix" by Hines when he and others were arrested on Thanksgiving eve, 1932, and set free in Magistrate Capshaw's court though police had found the bank in full operation and seized equipment, charged Hines with counseling Attorney J. Richard (Dixie) Davis to delay the case until an amenable magistrate could hear it. According to Wainberg, Hines named Capshaw.

Before the case came up before Magistrate Capshaw, the witness said, he, who was one of the deendants under the bogus name of George Klein, accompanied Hines to a "beeksteak" at a Democratic club and Capshaw was there. The following colloquy occurred:

Hines: "I have a policy case, a very important case. It's a case coming before you and I'd like you to take care of it for me."

Capshaw: "Yes, who is it?"

Hines: "George Klein and others. It is very important that this case be taken care of. I'm very much interested in it."

Capshaw: "I haven't failed you yet, I'll take care of it."

All Were Dismissed.

That conversation being over, they left, Weinberg said, and he reported to "Dixie" Davis the "fix" was perfect, and events proved him correct. He and all hands were dismissed.

As another instance of Hines' intercession for the gang, Weinberg cited the "Lulu" Rosenkrantz case.

"Lulu," who was Dutch Schultz's chauffeur and bodyguard, and who was slain with "The Dutchman" in 1935, was caught speeding one day by a policeman while in possession of 50,000 policy slips. The word was sent to Hines, Weinberg testified, and "Lulu" was set free, though police kept the slips.

Weinberg told of a series of complaints to Hines about the activities of detectives. Each time arrests began to mount, according to the witness, he would go to Hines. Shortly after that the arrests among shops operated by the gang would diminish, although arrests of collectors for independent policy operators continued.

When Dutch Schultz was being "tailed" by a Federal man named Salke, in connection with the investigation of the Dutchman's income tax, the gang also appealed to Hines, Weinberg said, and although Hines said Federal intervention was something different, accordingto the witness, soon the detective named Salke ceased to annoy though he was not removed.

Weinberg, according to his testimony, kept after Schultz to bring the policy bank of the two Malone brothers, Eddie and Elmer, into the combination, and "the Dutchman" kept putting him off. At length he burst out that he had received word from "Jimmy Hines in Hot Springs," to "lay off Maloney." Later a deal was arranged.

Weinberg said he began to see Hines regularly about ten days after his first meeting with him, at which he said Hines went on the Schultz pay roll at a minimum of $500 a week and the right to draw any sum up to $1,000, after an agreement that he would afford the mob what political protection he could.

He began to pay him $500 a week, he said, but the sum soon rose. Hines, he said, demanded more money. The witness recalled that operations of the mob were being hampered because of Schultz's war with Vincent Coll, but that after the slaying of Coll in February, 1932, affairs went more smoothly.

Weinberg said he went to see Hines, explaining the need of an office and "advertising."

"Open it up and try it and see how it goes," Hines is alleged to have said.

A business expansion drive was made with collectors placed in 300 or 400 stores all over Manhattan, in outlying boroughs and out on Long Island, Weinberg said.

PERSISTENT BACKACHE

Look To Your Kidneys They May Need Attention

It's an old saying that "thousands have kidney weakness and don't know it."

Backache may or may not come from bad functioning kidneys, but it often does.

Much of the waste, excess acids and poisons are drawn from the blood and expelled thru the kidneys and bladder—if the kidneys become inactive and do not work naturally they need flushing just as do the bowels.

So if your back aches—if your bladder is irritable—if passage is difficult or scanty and oftimes smarts and burns—if you have to break your refreshing sleep by getting up often at night—if you are continually nervous or irritable, it may be that your kidneys need attention.

One good and effective Kidney diuretic and stimulant that brings gratifying results is GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules—it's safe—it's harmless—and has been helping people with weak kidneys for scores of years.

But be sure it's GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules—right from Haarlem in Holland—ask for and get GOLD MEDAL—the original—the genuine—Be smart enough not to accept a counterfeit.

Divorce bill of Mrs. Klein alleged her husband blackened her eye at least once every four months.

Community Center Department and Office of National Capital Parks present the Tempo Choral Society, under the direction of W. Scott Mayo, at the Sylvan Theater Tuesday night. Program of Negro spirituals and other songs, with solos by Emerson Johnson, E. E. Ayres, Obie Holmes, Malcolm Taylor, H. A. Payne, Frankie Crowder and Vivian Christian.

A large audience assembled last evening on the Washington Monument Grounds to enjoy the last of the summer attractions provided by the Community Center Department and the Office of National Capital Parks. The reserved section was fairly well filled, and the sloping greensward was dotted with groups of listeners taking advantage of the opportunity for musical recreation after the heat of the day. A program of Negro spirituals and affiliated songs was presented by the Tempo Choral Society, making its fifth annual appearance at the Sylvan Theater under the direction of W. Scott Mayo.

No concert of this character would be complete without compositions by the dean of American Negro composers, Henry Thacker Burleigh, who was represented by "Ethiopia's Paean of Exaltation" and his arrangements of "Deep River" and "Hold On." Mr. Burleigh, who is now in his seventy-second year, was the first of his race to realize the artistic value of the spirituals and to harmonize these traditional songs for recital and concert purposes. His work in this field has brought him international recognition, and has overshadowed his other excellent lyrics.

His junior by 16 years, B. Nathanial Dett is equally distinguished as an arranger of his people's folk music and as an original composer. His "Cheer the Weary Traveler" opened the program, which included his "O Hear the Lambs A' Crying" and "Chariot Jubilee."

Among the arrangements of spirituals were "Troubles of This World," by W. Scott Mayo and "Go Down, Moses" and "The Crucifixion" by C. Mayo, the director's son. Included in the program were Dorsey's "Give Me Your Hand" and "Is There Anybody Here," Boyd's "Plenty Good Room," Smiths "I Can Tell the World," Johnson's "Lift Every Voice and Sing," and Jacques Wolfe's "The Glory Road."

Branch Honored; Mulligan Resigns As Aviation Head

The resignation of Denis Mulligan was announced yesterday as the new Civil Aeronautics Authority took over the Bureau of Air Commerce, of which he had been director.

Chairman Edward J. Noble of the Authority said that the resignation was accepted with reluctance after Mulligan had agreed to be a representative at the Fourth Diplomatic Conference on Private Air Law.

At the same time Harllee Branch, former Second Assistant Postmaster General, was given a silver service by colleagues on the occasion of his becoming a member of the new authority. A basket of flowers also was presented to Miss Jean Clark, secretary to Branch.

The authority met yesterday to consider details of taking over the Bureau of Air Commerce and air-mail division of the Interstate Commerce Commission. All employes in the older bureau are transferred to the new authority for one year.

7 Incumbents Lead Primary In Mississippi

Rankin and McGehee Far Ahead of Opponents for Congress.

By the Associated Press.

Jackson, Miss., Aug. 23.—Six incumbent Congressmen who faced opposition in Mississippi apparently had been returned in today's Democratic primary on the face of incomplete but indicative returns.

Wide margins of those who now hold seats were increasing steadily as the returns came in.

In the Seventh District Representative McGhee, of Meadville, led his two opponents, District Attorney Hugh Gillespie, of Raymond, and State Representative Tom Reed, of Natchez, by more than 6,000 votes.

Voting Is Light.

Voting generally was light in absence of State-wide races and national issues. The total vote was not expected to exceed 125,000.

Representative Whittington, of Greenwood, won the Third District nomination without opposition.

The House Military Affairs Committee Chairman, Representative Rankin, of Tupelo, was running two to one better than the combined vote of his two opponents in the First District. Half of the 225 percincts gave Rankin 7,915, State Representative Sam Lumpkin, of Tupelo, 3,553, and Charles Hamilton, of Aberdeen, 446.

In the Second District Representative Doxey, of Holly Springs, had a five-to-one majority over State Senator Mansard Bulloch, of Water Valley. Ninety-seven of the district's 190 precincts gave Doxey 5,985 and Bulloch 1,161.

Ackerman in Lead.

Representative Ford of Ackerman, was out in front of D. L. Gregory, of Kosciusko, and Joe Sheffield, Pittsboro. Sixty-three of 205 boxes gave Ford 3,179, Gregory 1,252 and Sheffield 537.

With more than three-fourths of the Fifth District's 194 precincts reported Representative Collins, of Meridian, had rolled up a 9,000 vote lead over Robert F. Mason, Magee publisher. Collins had 11,575 and Mason 2,156.

Representative Colmer, of Pascagoula, apparently won the Sixth District nomination, leading R. G. Wooten, of Hattiesburg 15,997 to 5,857 on returns from 153 of the district's 194 boxes.

The Seventh District vote, with 238 of 295 boxes in, stood: McGehee 15,178, Gillespie 9,151 and Reed 3,264.

Dover, Del., Aug. 23 (U.P.).—Representative Allen, ardent New Dealer, was renominated for Congress today at the biennial convention of Delaware Democrats.

Allen had been conceded the nomination to seek again Delaware's only seat in the House of Representatives, although brief opposition came from J. Reese White, Millsboro, Mrs. Marguerite Dugan Bodziak, Democratic national committeewoman, and Samuel M. Culver, Delmar.

Parley Asked By Roosevelt On Labor Law

Labor

with the Wagner act, certain ambiguous sections have been discovered.

While some have been clarified by the courts, others will very likely need legislative attention nxt winter. The Chief Executive emphasized that he had not discussed with Green possible changes in the act.

Mr. Roosevelt added he had thus far given no thought to his appointment for the forthcoming vacancy on the National Labor Relations Board.

The term of Donald W. Smith expires this month. After his talk with the President last week, Green said he had mentioned the projected appointd, but had nothing specific to say to Mr. Roosevelt about Smith.

Green told reporters he thought members of the board should be more "judicial minded."

A. F. of L. Charts Changes.

Atlantic City, N. J., Aug. 23.—The American Federation of Labor will introduce legislation at the next session fo Congress for major amendments to the wages and hours law including drastic curtailment of the powers now delegated to the administration of the act, it was revealed today by William Green, Federation president, at the quarterly meeting here of the organization's executive council.

Major changes which the Federation will seek are as follows:

Ending the right of the administrator to fix wages of apprentices in the 30 to 40 cents an hour classification; the A. F. of L. has consistently fought against any differentials in the law whether based on geographic or individual economic considerations.

Terminating the complete control which the administrator can exercise over the boards he appoints for each industry. It was said that the administrator can dismiss a board whose findings do not please him and keep appointing new boards until he finds one that issues reports to his satisfaction.

Removing from the administrator the right to establish conditions of apprenticeship, including setting the percentage of apprentices that may be employed, stating how long a man may be considered an apprentice and fixing other working conditions. It is the federation's feeling that a board representing both labor and employers such as the Federal committee on apprentice training, should administer this phase of the law.

Sloan Glad to Co-operate.

New York, Aug. 23 (AP).—George A. Sloan, chairman of the Consumers' Goods Industries Committee, said tonight that "industry will gladly co-operate in a sincere effort to work out the common problems" of government, labor and capital.

He added, in comment on President Roosevelt's statement that a conference would be called to consider changes in the national labor relations act, "we will gladly co-operate, particularly in the light of inequalities that have already become apparent."

The Political Arena

California Goes to Polls in Fog of Counterclaims; Hoosier G. O. P. Calmly Awaits Chicken Dinner.

By the Associated Press.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.: It was pretty good bet today that most of California's record registration of 3,454,058 would turn out at the polls next Tuesday—but it was a better bet that the majority still did not know what to do about it.

McADOO.

Presidential favor, labor indorsements, a $30-a-week pension plan and a more-than-ordinary run of charges and counter-charges were the highlights.

Until recently, the incumbent Democratic Senator—William Gibbs McAdoo—basked rather peacefully a pretty good bet today that most of ing, but cloudy weather threatened when rivals charged he was asking campaign funds from Federal employes and that a membership in the Ku Klux Klan bore his name. He denied both allegations promptly. A Senate committee was investigating the former charge.

* * * *

CANTON, GA.: Senator George predicted today that if the "committee of elimination" succeeded in defeating him and some other Southern incumbents in coming primaries "you may expect passage of the antilynching bill in the next Congress."

The Senator, on the Presidential purge list, told a northeast Georgia audience "you may also expect passage of a bill affecting the suffrage of every man and woman of the country." He did not elaborate on the nature of this bill or name the other incumbent Southerners.

WASHINGTON, IND.: A New York State industrialist who believes businessmen opposed to the New Deal should do more to fight it will follow his own precept and stake the Republican Party to a $25,000 rally near here Saturday.

Homer L. Capehart, native Hoosier, now of Buffalo, will pay for food and entertainment for some 8,500 party workers at an all-day "cornfield conference" to open the Nation-wide Republican Congressional campaign.

The rally will be held in a 120-acre field on Capehart's farm near here. Chicken dinner will be served in 38 tents with a canvas spread of 100,000 square feet.

Speakers at the rally will be National Chairman John D. M. Hamilton, Senator Townsend (Republican), of Delaware, and Republican Representatives Wadsworth and Andrews of New York, and Martin, of Massachusetts.

* * * *

BUFFALO, N. Y.: Senator Wagner told the New York State Federation of Labor, in convention today, that democracy in the United States is being rebuilt along "stronger lines."

The labor federation's convention itself, Wagner declared, was "a manifestation of a healthy, functioning democracy."

* * * *

MADISON, WIS.: Gov. Philip La Follette predicted today at the first State-wide conference of the women's division of the National Progressive Party of America that within a few years the N. P. A. would become the leading party in the United States.

More than 500 women assembled for the conference. La Follette declared the N. P. A., which he launched April 28, was fully under way, with pledges of support from New England and "every State south of the Mason-Dixon line."

Whenever the leadership of President Roosevelt is withdrawn, the Governor said, the Democratic Party will return to the control of reactionaries whom he classed as nowise different from the old guard of the Republican Party.

* * * *

HARRISBURG, PA: An extensive fence-building program occupied Pennsylvania's Democratic leadership today in advance of the official opening Saturday of the party's fall campaign to retain control of the Keystone State.

County leaders, flocking to the Capital to iron out bitter primary disputes in the presence of State leaders, reunited in one organization for a battle against the Republicans.

Gov. Earle telephoned his office from Panama that he would return from a Central American vacation Wednesday in time to be on hand for the opening rally.

Mosley was released on $500 bond Monday. He was arrested at a campaign meeting Saturday night at which he heckled Maybank.

JAMESTOWN, N. Y.: Samuel A. Carlson, Jamestown's official mayor-emeritus, designated Democratic candidate for Congress, had the assurance today that his brother, the Republican County chairman, will not "sacrifice principle for sentiment."

The Republican leader, D. Lawrence Carlson, served notice in a letter to the Jamestown Post that his [illegible] could expect no help from him.

BOSTON, GA.: Representative Cox held a drug store crowd's decision today over an unidentified visitor he encountered while introducing himself as a candidate for renomination.

The critic was slapped and, outside, was dropped to his knees before intervention from a crowd.

Lewis Charges Tydings Raised Cost of Drugs

press Democratic convictions, not Republican convictions."

Recalls Majority of 193,

There was applause for this, and more applause when Lewis said:

"I want to say that I expect to follow the flag of democracy and keep the pledges of the Democratic platform of 1936."

That Maryland approved that platform, he said, was demonstrated by the 158,000 majority it gave President Roosevelt in 1936.

Scoffs at Debt Fears.

Lewis scoffed at Tydings' criticism about the national debt of $16,500,000,000. He pointed out that there were 50,000,000 Americans earning incomes. The national debt, spread out among these, he said, was only about $330—"about half the price of a Ford car." He said the debt could be paid off with interest if each of these paid $1.58 a month for 25 years.

"Who wouldn't want to pay $1.58 a month to be sure of his job?" Lewis asked.

Lewis criticized "Roosevelt-hating newspapers" for using the word "purge" in conection with Federal officeholders appointed by Tydings. He said the word "purge" smacked of Hitler and the Borgias. The truth was, he said, that the commissions of the United States marshal, the United States attorney and others expired in February, and Tydings held up reappointment until they had come through for him in the primary.

Answering Tydings' criticism of Roosevelt invading the State, Lewis said that Vandenberg had once offered to help Tydings in Maryland.

"A Foreign Senator."

"Not a word of complaint did we hear about a foreign Senator coming into Maryland," he said, and the crowd applauded heartily.

Lewis will go into western Maryland today, speaking in Frederick at 2 p. m.

Earlier yesterday Lewis called for a Senate investigation of sources of money being spent in the primary fight.

In a letter to Senator Sheppard (Democrat), of Texas, chairman of the Senate investigating committee, Lewis wrote:

"Certain advertisements have been inserted in Maryland newspapers stating that the C. I. O. is 'actively financing' the nomination of David J. Lewis to the United States Senate. This advertisement is published by the authority of Fred A. Dolfield, treasurer of the Tydings campaign committee. I would be grateful if your committee would investigate immediately this false statement. If you find that I have received any contributions from the C. I. O., or any other organization, make the matter public immediately. If, on the other hand, you find that the above statement is untrue, I trust that you will make that fact public.

Move to Investigate.

"I also request that you investigate at your earliest possible convenience a report that Mr. Morris Shapiro, president of the Boston Iron & Metal Co. and of the Globe Brewing Co., has contributed $5,000 directly, or otherwise, to the campaign fund of Senator Tydings on behalf of himself or the liquor interests associated with him.

"I also ask that you investigate the contribution listed under the name of M. G. Belding, 204 Tunbridge road, Baltimore, Md., and ascertain whether his contribution of $500 to Mr. Tydings, made very early in the campaign, actually came from him, or whether or not, as secretary of the Globe Brewing Co., this contribution was in fact that of Mr. Shapiro."

Senator Sheppard said that the committee would send investigators into Maryland if there appeared to be a basis for the charges.

Glen Echo's Trombonist Glen Jones and Trumpeter Del Frietag work out a few sizzling rhythms.

By Mary Harris.

This "Lambeth Walk" is what the dancers ordered!

Barnee and Yvonne Ashburn did about two demonstration turns of the "Lambeth" around the Shoreham Terrace on Monday evening and blest if everybody (by the hundreds) didn't get up and start "Lambething" too. The answer is that the "Lambeth Walk" is plenty easy, plenty fun and with a pretty swing.

Suii Sin, Chinese lovely, is another Terrace sensation. She dances to both Chinese and American music, produces innumerable lighted ciggies in her "Sensation in Smoke." She confided in us that she took the ciggies out of her hair, but we'd have believed it sooner if she'd said she lifted them out of her incredible eyelashes.

Only trained dachshund act in the world is Hanna Woolford's. There are 18 of these cunning frankfurter canines, but we are told that 7 of them are understudies. The Ashburns are a holdover (previously scheduled dance act being canceled at the last minute), but that's the Terrace customers' gain, especially in that combo-ruma-tango.

Unofficial opening of the Hour Glass, new beauty spot in the Trans-Lux Building, will take place on Thursday, August 25. Official opening with entertainers Bebe Allen and Evelyn Knight (who will divide their time between the Hour Glass and Vincent Gallegher's other attractive spot, the King Cole Room, will be staged on Monday, August 29.

Leo Lisee and Jack Campbell will not appear at Mayfair next Monday as scheduled. It seems that Jack's due to have a brief and not too important session with a doctor. The boys will be Mayfair-ing later.

You've probably seen a clown rock off a pyramid of tables at the circus, but when you see Donnelly (late of Ringling's) do this at Bamboo Gardens, you'll get a new thrill. May we nominate Donnelly's partner and daughter, Betty, as the sweetest girl you'll see in a floor show this year.

Powhatan Roof performing, rehearsing and acting in "Going Native," have added 4 pounds to "Tiny" Meeker's 200, he says. 'Nice going—we'd hate to have "Tiny" lose his figger.

Arsenio Ralon (Madrillon luncheon music) teaches violin, plays on the radio, composes dreamy, wistful waltzes.

Tom O'Donnell, owner of Griffith Farms Tavern, says that he "dates his chickens." But we find that he has no intention of combining archaic and 1938 slang. The idea is that all chickens served at Griffith are tender pullets born in this year of grace.

Goldsborough To Keep Aloof In Tydings Race

Tydings

The basin is near his old home in Havre de Grace, but he had nothing to do with putting it there.

"The people of Havre de Grace voted in a special election in 1936 on the question of a yacht basin.

Tydings Did Not Vote.

"The vote was in favor of it. Senator Tydings did not even vote in that election, no longer being a resident of Havre de Grace. The location was decided upon by the town council after considerable study. The location picked is off the city park, and that is one reason it was selected. It is several hundred yards across a mud flat to Senator Tydings' old home. Havre de Grace has spent about $16,000 on the yacht basin and the WPA about $24,000.

"Senator Tydings had not a thing to do with it."

The former home of Senator Tydings in Havre de Grace is now occupied by his sister, Mrs. J. J. Pickett.

Friends of Senator Tydings said that the charge as to the WPA road had been made under other auspices some time ago and that it had been shown the public highway was of no exclusive benefit to the Senator. As to a Government agency loan on Senator Tydings' former home, Lewis had said, "This loan has been paid off."

The Baltimore Evening Sun commented today:

"Here is something that really ought to make Senator Tydings blush. He paid it off. Davie accuses him of it, and is ready to produce proof. Is there no way that Millard can squirm out of this one?"

Cumberland Gap To Be Developed As Historic Site

Historic Cumberland Gap, key pass to the West from Kentucky and Virginia in pioneer days, may soon become a national historical park, monument or historic site.

The National Park Service yesterday announced a meeting will be held Saturday in Harrogate, Tenn., to consider plans for the development. Members of Congress, National Park Service officials and leading citizens of Kentucky, Virginia and Tennessee will participate.

Last year the Richmond regional office of the park service recommended that the area be set aside as an historical park, monument or historic site. Cumberland Gap, which was named for the Duke of Cumberland by its discoverer, Dr. Thomas Walker, of Virginia, in 1750, occupied a strategic position during the Civil War.

Roosevelt

brey Williams, director and deputy director of the Work Progress Administration, took part.

It was a question as to what went on at that conference that started the President off on the ethics of intervention in primaries. He said the chief question of discussion was a matter which involved public morality. He recalled that 28 years ago, when he first entered public life as a member of the State Senate, the burning issue in the State was whether a direct primary law should be enacted.

Recalls Objective.

The President pointed out that he had taken a great interest in the objective of the direct primary, which was, as he put it, the very simple one of getting rid of old-fashioned boss-controlled conventions. The primary, he noted, gave the actual voters within a party the right to choose their candidates for public office.

In most States, he explained, methods were devised by which a primary would be limited to the members of a party. This was a necessary limitation, he argued, because if even a handful of voters from an opposing party participated the result became void as an expression of the will of the party holding the primary.

It was perfectly proper, he contended, that a candidate should be chosen by 51 per cent of the enrolled voters of a party, but if 2 or 3 per cent of voters entered the primary of a party to which they did not belong then the will of the voters would be completey overcome and destroyed, he added.

Taking Idaho as one example, he maintained that a comparison of the total vote cast in the primary of each of the principal parties in 1936 and this year showed conclusively that between 15,000 and 20,000 Republicans voted in the Democratic primary.

Cites Figures.

For 1936 he gave a total of 42,000 votes in the Republican primary and a total of 55,000 in the Democratic, as compared with only 30,000 in the Republican and 85,000 in the Democratic primaries this year.

The President mentioned two other illustrations of what he termed the same kind of violation of public morality—the letter, which he said was now becoming famous, of the Republican national committeeman of Georgia, calling on Republicans to enter the Democratic primary, and the report, which he termed credible, that Maryland Republicans were being begged to do the same thing.

The President obviously was referring in one instance to the letter of James W. Arnold, Republican national committeeman of Georgia, urging organized and unanimous support of Senator George by Republicans in the Democratic primary September 14.

Twice in the course of his lecture, which he delivered with obvious relish, the President upbraided what he called the Tory press. He remarked that he had given the correspondents a good story, but one that would be hard to write.

The President expects to return to Washington early next week, but he said he would come back to Hyde Park after only a few days at the White House. If he enters the lists against Senator Tydings it is thought likely he will do so in that interim, probably on Labor Day.

Pope Holds Tongue.

By the United Press.

Senator Pope (Democrat), of Idaho, last night declined to comment on President Roosevelt's criticism of Republican intervention in Democratic primaries and failed to indicate whether he will seek re-election as an independent.

Pope, New Deal farm legislation spokesman in the Senate, defeated by Representative Clark in the recent Idaho Democratic primary, has been urged to oppose Clark as a write-in candidate this fall.

It was said that Mr. Roosevelt's statement at his Hyde Park, N. Y., press conference possibly might influence Pope to contest the seat. On the other hand, Postmaster General Farley indorsed Clark shortly after the primary and an independent move by Pope would be embarassing to the party moguldom.

She Leads the Rural Carriers' Band

Fortune Favors Ramsey Black, Postmaster General for Nonce

Never Asked for It, Says Acting Head of Government's Largest Business; Was Sorting Mail in Harrisburg Seven Months Ago.

Ramsey S. Black was noticeably embarrassed yesterday when asked how it felt to be Acting Postmaster General of the United States seven months after he had been sorting letters is Harrisburg, Pa.

RAMSEY S. BLACK.

A series of coincidences automatically moved him up the official ladder Monday from a Third Assistant Postmaster Generalship to acting head of the Government's largest business. Before February 1, when he took office, he had been postmaster of Harrisburg, Pa., where he occasionally sorted mail for the patrons.

Postmaster General Farley took an Alaskan vacation. Then W. W. Howe, First Assistant, took a vacation. Responsibility for signing Mr. Farley's mail then fell upon Harllee Branch, Second Assistant, but Monday he took office as a member of the new Civil Aeronautics Authority, and the responsibility fell upon Black, next in line.

Black was embarassed when asked about it. "If anything is said about this, someone might get the idea that I have done something noteworthy. That would be untrue, because it is purely a routine matter for me to act as Postmaster General. I just stay up here in my own office and sign a few routine letters. That's all there is for me to do about it."

After being shorn of his new powers yesterday while Farley returned to town to address the Rural Letter Carrier's Association, Black expected to resume them again today when Farley goes to New York.

Mr. Black turned out to be a very modest man. Word has gotten around the department that he is a very capable executive in charge of financial affairs. "When I first came to the department I was somewhat nervous," he said yesterday, "but my colleagues have been so courteous and so helpful that my work has been made easy."

He appeared humble over holding his job. "I never asked for it," he said. "I had been active in affairs in Pennsylvania and had worked with postmasters in the State. I just worked hard up there, and I guess it showed."

Before being appointed postmaster in 1934 he had been a passenger conductor on the Pennsylvania Railroad for 22 years and a passenger brakeman for 10 years before that.

"No," he confided, "I was not a bit embarrassed yesterday by being Acting Postmaster General." It developed that in his second day in office he had been acting chief.

Mrs. Krueger's Wounds To Reach Crisis Today

Los Angeles, Aug. 23 (AP).—Tomorrow will bring a crisis in the condition of Mrs. Karl Krueger, wife of the Kansas City Orchestra conductor, her physicians said today. She was shot three times last Friday by Charles McDonald, unemployed electrician, who said she was dominating his wife's life.

Streamline Box Wins Country Letter Carriers

Letter

loaf-shaped cover, swung up and back.

The device entirely eliminates the small door which characterizes the present boxes. "That door is a nuisance," Adney decided after watching the difficulties letter carriers have with his box down in Evergreen. "It won't stay open, it breaks off, it sticks, it squeaks," he said.

So he went to work with a piece of roofing and the lever principle. Eureka! A streamlined letter box emerged.

Seeks U. S. Approval.

Coleman said he had the device patented eight years ago and ever since has been trying to get it approved by the Postoffice Department. He figures that if the convention delegates like it, he can sell the idea to postal officials.

The carriers, who tested the box for speed and efficiency yesterday, seemed to think it worked like a dream. One defect was pointed out by William Scholer, president of the Illinois Carriers' Association. He said the inner receptacle in which the mail is placed should be open at one end so the postman could see at a glance whether there were any letters to be taken away.

Coleman agreed an open end would be an improvement, and plans to remedy the situation.

Postmaster General Farley brought up the whole subject of letter boxes at the morning session, when he told the 5,000 delegates, "there is no more attractive ornament to a country home than an artistic, well-preserved mail receptacle."

Praises Carriers.

He urged the letter carriers to work with their patrons until "every rural route is not only an institution but an ornament to the countryside." The Postmaster General praised the men for the service they render the Postoffice Department and for the important part they play in rural communities.

Representative Ramspeck, of Georgia, discussing the "spoils system," demanded of the delegates, "How can men elected to Congress have any respect for the merit system when their own success is obviously due to the sort of politics we have witnessed in recent months—with State and Federal machines using jobs ruthlessly?"

Although his attack was aimed at controlled politics, he made no direct reference to the Georgia senatorial race.

Yesterday afternoon the postmen's ladies' auxiliary dedicated a memorial tree in honor of active, retired and deceased carriers. The evening was occupied with state dinners and pleasure jaunts down the Potomac.

About 6,000 are expected at the gala banquet at the Mayflower tonight, when Farley and Chairman James M. Mead, of the House Post Office Committee, will speak. The association and the auxiliary will hold business meetings this morning and this afternoon.

Junkman Seized In Torso Killings; Traced by Quilt

By the United Press.

Cleveland, Aug. 23—Police tonight jailed a 56-year-old junk dealer in their quest for the "mad butcher of Kingsbury Run," who has beheaded and butchered 14 "forgotten people" in four years.

The junk man, fitting a description of the last known possessor of a tattered quilt in which parts of the last of the killer's victims were found, was picked up by detectives on a downtown street, near the area known to be frequented by the murderer.

Entente Bids Against Hitler For Hungary

Budapest

Italian policy." Representatives of the Little Entente nations hailed results of the conference as "enormous progress toward peace and security in central Europe."

Hungarian diplomats, overjoyed that Hungary was being wooed simultaneously by Germany and the Entente, expressed satisfaction that they had received "something for nothing."

Germany, Budapest observers said, hopes to dictate to Hungary the proposed Hungarian-Czechoslovak pact on rights of the 700,000 Hungarians in Czechoslovakia.

Reich Annoyed at Italy.

Germany's interest would be in obtaining the best possible treatment for Czechoslovakia's Hungarian minority to bolster her demands for autonomy for the 3,500,000 Sudeten Germans in Czechoslovakia.

By the Trianon Treaty of June 4, 1920, between Hungary and the allies, Hungary's independence was recognized, but her army was limited to 35,000 and her population was reduced from 10,500,000 to 7,500,000 by ceding territory to Czechoslovakia, Rumania and Yugoslavia.

Germany, now trying to extend her influence into southeastern Europe, was pictured by Yugoslav sources as annoyed at Italy's efforts to gain supremacy in the Danube Basin.

It was reported that Rumania and Italy were considering a friendship accord similar to the five-year treaty signed by Italy and Yugoslavia last October.

Horthy Sees Heligoland.

Heligoland, Germany, Aug. 23 (AP).—Hungary's ruler saw Germany's Gibralter today in a state visit marked by official silence on political discussions between German and Hungarian chiefs of state.

When he inspected the fortifications of this island stronghold with Chancellor Hitler this afternoon, Admiral Nicholas Horthy, the Hungarian regent, saw what even Premier Mussolini wasn't shown on his state visit to Germany last September 25-30.

Hungarian and German officials did not disclose whether the program, crowded with military display, gave Horthy and Hitler a chance to resume political conversations. The fate of Czechoslovakia, however, had been listed as one of the chief topics to be discussed.

Some Britons Still Believe Midwives Ride Broomsticks

Cambridge, England, Aug. 23 (AP).—Two anthropologists today informed British scientists that midwives, in hurry-up cases, are still believed by some Englishmen to have a supernatural means of transportation—such as broomstick riding.

The medieval superstition survives all over the eastern counties of England, according to a paper presented by L. F. Newman and Miss B. Newman before a section of the British Association for the Advancement of Science.

The Newmans told of a young husband who went out in the middle of the night to bring a midwife. He said the midwife told him to go home and she would be on hand in time for the birth.

The husband said he returned by the shortest possible way and found the midwife already in attendance.

"The broomstick is still the best way to get around," she is supposed to have told the man.

Colored Witness Held in Sanford Robbery Killing

Thomas Giles, the colored man who was beaten on the head with a revolver at the time 20-year-old George E. Sanford was shot to death in an automobile the morning of August 13, was taken into custody by police again yesterday.

The prisoner was taken into custody originally shortly after the shooting. He was released by police of the Tenth Precinct.

The 24-year-old man who lives in the 4500 block of Cathedral avenue northwest, has admitted being in the automobile at the time Sanford was shot. He is expected to be star witness at the inquest at 11:30 a. m. today.

According to police, Giles, who is suffering from a broken shoulder and lacerations of the head, was thrown from a speeding car after Sanford had been shot.

Police Seek Youth With Brown Pants, But 9 Are on Bus

Detective Sergt. R. J. Cox thought for a moment some Fascist order named "The Brown Trousers" had invaded Washington.

He scratched his head as he stood at the Greyhound Bus Terminal yesterday, with a warrant for an 18-year-old youth wanted in Charleston, W. Va., who was described as wearing brown trousers.

For out of a bus stepped nine youths, all about 18, all wearing brown trousers.

Cox questioned the youths, one by one, and arrested one of them, who admitted he was from Charleston and on his way to New York "to see the town." The prisoner denied the charge of grand larceny in the warrant.

Children Seen Needing Doctors to Keep Well

Mothers of healthy babies need a doctor's help in keeping them well, the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor points out in its revised edition of the bulletin, "Keeping the Well Baby Well."

The bureau recommends a physician who sees the child only once or twice a month can detect symptoms of trouble more readily than the mother, who sees him too frequently to notice changes. The bureau advises mothers to have their children immunized against diphtheria at nine months and vaccinated against smallpox before their first birthday.

Logical But Incomplete.

President Roosevelt is on very firm ground when he takes the position that intervention in a party primary by members of an opposing party is a politically immoral procedure.

If the party system is to have any meaning, and it is basic under our form of government, the determination of a particular party's candidates must be left to the adherents of that party. In one recent primary, at least, that has not been the case.

Because of Idaho's peculiar law on the subject, a great many Republicans—the President's estimate is between 10,000 and 15,000—voted in the Democratic Senatorial primary which resulted in the defeat of Senator Pope and the nomination of Representative Clark. The presumption is, and the evidence makes it appear well founded, that had only Democrats participated in that balloting Mr. Pope would have won.

President Roosevelt is correct in saying that such intervention tends to destroy the objective of the direct primary system. Yet the laws of many States not only permit but in some cases even tend to encourage this practice.

The President, however, failed to carry his unassailable logic one step further. If it is reprehensible for Republicans to vote in Democratic primaries and vice versa, it is surely equally destructive to have the weight and influence of the Federal Government employed to distort the primary system.

Courting The Magyars.

The visit to Germany of Admiral Nicholas Horthy, regent of Hungary, has produced a violent fluttering in Europe's diplomatic dovecotes.

The reasons are not far to seek. Because of the disappearance of Austria, the borders of Hungary and Germany now march together. Like Czechoslovakia, therefore, the Magyar kingdom constitutes a possible path through which the Nazi Drang nach Osten (push to the east) may find an outlet. But while this circumstance constitutes a standing threat to Hungary's independence, Hitler's smashing attack on the status quo in Central Europe has, Magyar statesmen believe, certain obvious advantages for their country.

Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, Rumania all have territory which once belonged to Hungary and harbor within their borders a great many Magyars. Alone, Hungary is clearly not strong enough to regain her lost areas. With Germany's assistance, however, the situation might be quite otherwise. Thus a basis exists for close political co-operation between Berlin and Budapest supplementing the strong economic ties that have always linked Germany and Hungary.

In 1937, 41 per cent of all of Hungary's exports went to Germany and Austria, while 44.2 per cent of her imports came from the area now included in Greater Germany. This dependence on the Third Reich has its real disadvantages and its unavoidable dangers, a fact which Hungarian statesmen have recognized and which they have sought to minimize by seeking alternate markets for Hungary's agricultural surplus. But whether they can do so depends only in part on their own efforts; it depends, for the most part, on the readiness of other nations than Germany to take Hungary's goods.

In any event, Hungary is under constant pressure to become an economic satellite of the Third Reich and, if possible, a political satellite as well. There are elements within Hungary which distinctly favor such a course. While the Nazi movement, as an imported article, has been under attack at the hands of the government, Nazi ideas, in a more or less indigenous form, have taken hold in the kingdom and show signs of spreading.

Should Hungary fall into Germany's hands either voluntarily by means of an alliance which some predict will be the outcome of Horthy's visit to Berlin, or through the pressure of circumstance, the Little Entente nations—Czechoslovakia, in particular, but also Rumania and Yugoslavia—would be under the gun of the Third Reich. Czechoslovakia's situation, already bad, would become worse.

Not surprisingly, therefore, this week's meeting of the statesmen of the Little Entente has resulted in an agreement to offer Hungary full equality in armaments, a non-aggression pact and increased rights for the Magyar minorities. Coming at this time, the move is no doubt intended to counter any offer Hitler may make the Hungarian regent of closer German-Hungarian relations. Although in by no means a wholly happy situation, internally and externally, Hungary now has the satisfaction of being courted by all her neighbors.

Political Pawns.

Samuel Wiseman, executive secretary of the Workers' Alliance, offers a logical defense of his organization's plan to appeal to WPA workers for political contributions. "Like any other trade union," he says, "we have to go to our membership for support. It is unfortunate, though not our fault, that WPA workers are getting such low wages." In the hope, therefore, that a friendly Congress, elected with the help of WPA votes, will provide more relief at high wages, Mr. Wiseman urges WPA workers to make political donations now for the sake of later benefits.

Numerous precedents for this sort of pressure upon a subsidized group could, of course, be cited. Indeed, everybody who benefits, or hopes to benefit, from any kind of Government subsidy, direct of indirect, is a potential victim of professional lobbyists. Appeals to fear or cupidity provide most effective arguments to elicit contributions for any cause.

Heretofore we have rather taken for granted that beneficiaries of the Government would band together to oppose political changes that might jeopardize their own interests. For instance, it seemed natural for protected industries to contribute funds to the party promising them the most tariff protection. Moreover, organized veterans, organized farmers, organized labor and various special groups have long used their political power to further their selfish interests, and have financed campaigns to influence the course of legislation.

Why, then, does the collection of political contributions from WPA workers fall in a different and more dangerous category? Is it merely because the sacrifice seems excessive in view of their destitute state? That appears to be the chief reason why WPA Administrator Hopkins objects to the efforts of the Workers' Alliance to enlist WPA aid in bringing about the defeat of Representative O'Connor of New York. There is, however, a much more fundamental ground for denouncing political appeals to the self-interest of WPA workers.

These workers and their families have come to constitute a formidable percentage of the total voting population of the country. Because they are numerous and because their dependence upon the Government is complete, any attempt to use them as a weapon of political power is a matter of great public concern. People in the position of WPA workers are hardly free agents in their choice of candidates for office. Fear and anxiety may transform them into facile tools of ambitious politicians and make it easy to persuade them to vote for those promising the greatest reward from a not inexhaustable public treasury.

In the past, when subsidized groups have banded together to bring about the political defeat of candidates believed to be inimical to perpetuation of their privileges, the country has been too philosophical about the situation. Even the bonus drives of powerful veterans' organizations have not aroused real fear that our political institutions would be jeopardized and the people's representatives become subservient mouthpieces of special interest groups.

But WPA workers are exceptionally malleable material in the hands of any ambitious politician unscrupulous or misguided enough to use them to further his own aims. If these distressed recipients of work relief can be persuaded that continuance of their jobs depends upon the perpetuation in power, or the overthrow, of any particular candidate for office, they will at once become a powerful and dangerous political force.

Put enough voters on relief rolls and instill into them the belief that their status as wards of the Government depends upon perpetuation of the regime in power, and that regime will remain in power more surely than if it were propped up by bayonets. We have not yet arrived at the stage where genuine freedom of choice in electoral contests has ceased to exist. But we are progressing along the road which leads to that ultimate catastrophe.

Queer And Disturbing.

There is something very queer about the deaths of those four convicts in the "Klondyke," or isolation block of the Philadelphia County Prison at Holmesburg. There is something still more queer about the theories by which the police seek to explain the tragedy. And there is something not a little disturbing in the outright assertion of the coroner that the men were scalded to death.

All, apparently, that can be learned from the prison authorities is that on Sunday night 23 convicts, said to have been the leaders of a hunger strike, were locked in the "Klondyke," and that when the guards entered the building Monday morning four of the 23 were dead. These four were in two adjoining cells, each of which contained, beside the two corpses, one living convict. The bodies of the men were described as covered with bruises. Autopsies undertaken yesterday ascribed the deaths to suffocation. At the same time the coroner demanded further examinations to show whether the suffocation was caused by "water or vapor or gas or any other cause."

Two detectives of the homicide squad reported that the four convicts were simultaneously stricken with prison dementia, and while thus out of their minds assaulted each other in pairs until all four dropped dead of exhaustion. This is an ingenious theory. But it fails to explain why the guards should have ignored these struggles or, if there were no guards, why such dangerous prisoners should have been left unguarded.

Moreover, the police theory seems contradicted by the post-mortem findings. But how was it possible that the third man in each cell escaped suffocation? There is also the question of why a Philadelphia judge should have been prompted to explain that the men had released steam by tearing away the pipes, and why the warden should then have hastily denied there are any steam pipes in the building.

It would be wrong to jump to the conclusion that the disciplinary methods which seem to us so horrible when practiced elsewhere are a commonplace of some prison administrations in this country. But it would also be intolerable for Gov. Earle and the State of Pennsylvania to let this incident pass without the fullest possible public investigation, including evidence from the surviving hunger strikers. The investigation should determine not only how these convicts died, but also why there have been six major disturbances within nine years in this one prison.

Poppycock.

Shirley Temple, it appears, is a "fellow traveler" of the Communists, along with "virtually everybody in Hollywood except Mickey Mouse and Snow White."

Probably, if one judges by the testimony of J. B. Matthews, star witness before the Dies committee, the "reds" could have had Snow White too, if they had wanted her. But the name must have unpleasant associations in Moscow, aside from the rather fatuous character of the damsel. Stalin stands for sterner stuff, such as Shirley Temple or, presumably, Ginger Rogers. Why even her name has a reddish sound, and is therefore excellent evidence of Communist complicity, according to the Matthews' standards.

But the pontifical doctor will probably decide, if he is recalled to the stand, that it is a horse-and-buggy business to identify individual Bolsheviks. A more efficient technique is indicated by his classification of "virtually everybody in Hollywood" as Communist stooges. The Matthews way is to get 'em by categories. And in a few short days of testimony he has not done badly.

The American Youth Congress, the League for Peace and Democracy and some score of other organizations are all set down as more or less communistic. Other witnesses before the Dies committee have been equally lush in presenting evidence. Mr. Walter Steele, who according to reports is a bit of a joiner himself, lists 640 organizations supposedly affiliated with the Communist movement, against which he can only muster a mere 114 professionally patriotic organizations. This is the number which he represents. If there were more it is a fair guess that Mr. Steele would represent them.

Dr. Matthews and Mr. Steele did well before the House Committee "investigating un-American activities." But others also ran, so fast that there was no chance to overtake their charges. There was John P. Frey, who fried the C. I. O., and Edward Sullivan, who sullied the Department of Labor. Mr. Sullivan's favorite hotbed of communism is San Francisco. Mr. Steele grants that California is pretty radical but apparently has greater faith in New York as a revolutionary center. The Communist Party, he says, controls more than 800,000 persons within the shadow of the Empire State Building, broadly speaking.

Except for Messrs. Matthews, Steele, Frey and Sullivan, it would all seem pretty hopeless. Colleges, churches, movie studios, summer camps, newspaper offices, country clubs, factories, Government service, even the Russian Embassy right here in Washington, all are permeated with communism.

No wonder the Dies committee needs more money to show the ramifications of the movement. But even if this worthy work project gets no further, its sponsors may derive some satisfaction from progress made. They have shocked Mark (not Edward) Sullivan, into the statement in our own columns that "the country would be appalled, if the country understood some of the conditions," which the Dies committee is laboring to make clear.

We take the liberty of doubting it. The House Committee "investigating un-American activities" has merely shown that Americans are great joiners, which everyone knew already. We are so constituted that if Mr. Walter Steele cannot produce a really attractive patriotic society, we will join one of the thousands subsidized from Moscow.

But Moscow must not count on that too much. It is merely the act of joining that appeals to us. Not even Shirley Temple, with all her wiles, will make us bona fide Communists. Not while we have the Dies committee to preserve our sense of what is ludicrous.

The other day the papers printed a picture of a chicken from which a tornado had stripped every feather, leaving him exposed and bewildered. We remember a landslide that did the same thing to a taxpayer.

"It is reported that irresponsible employment agencies are fleecing the unemployed." Living off the flat of the land, eh?

A man can't win an argument with a woman, but he can break even by staring into space and keeping his mouth shut.

Are voters dumb because they listen to politicians a lot, or do they listen to politicians a lot because they are dumb?

For A Planetarium.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: An astronomer at the Naval Observatory the other evening told us there is still a chance of getting a Jefferson Memorial in the form of a planetarium instead of a pile of rocks. He said, "Write to your Congressman." We said, "We haven't any." He said, "Then write to all of them!" So that's what we're doing, via The Post.

All aboard for a planetarium in the world's most intellectual city! Jefferson was a great planner. He planned the Constitution. He planned the University of Virginia. He planned Monticello. He planned the big clock at Monticello. He was about the greatest planner this country ever saw. And we're planning on a—Jefferson planetarium.

Hope For Tydings.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I note, with some alarm, that Senator Tydings' first reaction to the lambasting by the gentleman who runs the White House purgery (kindly note the spelling and don't jump at conclusions) was a dignified silence. This might mean that the Senator is disturbed too deeply to trust himself to speech, and it may not. But for fear Millard should really be terribly concerned I would point out a ray of hope—the President has not yet called him "a gentleman and a scholar" or said "God bless you, Millard." So long as these two accolades have not been whammed over the Senatorial stern, the worst has not been done. Kipling said:

"But oh, beware my country, when my country grows polite."

My advice is to beware your President when he begins Godblessing and calling people gentlemen and scholars. That is about the last word in yes-butting that we can imagine. "He is a gentleman and a scholar, but the hell with him!" It is the signal for (the immediate predecessor, the sure precursor of) an uppercut to the button.

Maybe, after all, the States will learn better sense than to think they still have the Constitutional right to choose their own representatives (or rather Mr. Roosevelt's representatives) in Congress. This power of the President to select Congressmen is probably one of those that "in other hands would be dangerous."

Well, shet mah mouf! I am packing to move to Germany. Hitler doesn't smile all the time.

A HORSE-AND-BUGGYITE.

More Police.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Experience of 30 years proves one thing about the traffic safety situation, and that one thing indisputably. It is this: The way to achieve safety on the streets and highways is by strict enforcement.

Strict enforcement means police, police, and more police.

We might as well face the fact that any other approach to the problem is temporizing. We have tried education, moral suasion, pleas, stickers, and many other things. Individually and lumped together, we know that they don't do much good.

We don't need any more traffic laws. But we do need several hundred more policemen to enforce the laws we have. Until we get these policemen so that the laws can be enforced we can appoint all the committees, do all the pious conferring, and plaster the town with stickers from end to end—with no permanent constructive result.

If press and public will present a united front and insist upon getting those policemen—even at the cost of higher taxes—and if press and public then will support, unflinchingly, a campaign of strict enforcement, touch what highly placed personage it will, Washington can save dozens of lives and many broken bodies each year. And we can make our streets safe for decent, regulation-respecting motorists and pedestrians alike.

Until Washington is willing to do that kind of a job we just are not going anywhere with our critical safety problem. Stickers and talk may salve, but they don't save. Enforcement does, and the record proves it! WILLIAM ULLMAN.
Washington, Aug. 17.

Our Well Bred Police.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The other night I had occasion to call a police scout car to help find a lost object. The men were immaculately dressed and acted with the fullest courtesy. When men serving us in this capacity show the breeding these men showed it helps make the Nation's Capital more exemplary. There is a saying, "He who puts his heart in his work is an artisan." LOUISE LESLIE.

Working Conditions.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I wish also to add my letter of protest with that of "Worn Out Carrier."

On those sizzling hot days when those poor, tired, hard-worked clerks who only sit in the office buildings couldn't endure the heat and were turned loose to attend the ball game, there was another class that also was not dismissed.

They were the railway mail clerks who had to tug and strain over heavy mail sacks inside of a steel postal car—and postal cars are not even equipped with electric fans.

Will someone please tell me why the "white collar" workers get all the consideration?

RAILWAY POSTAL CLERK.
Washington, August 21.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: If the Government is really interested in wages and hours from the humanitarian and not a political motive, they should take cognizance of the condition prevailing at PWA since its rebirth last June.

This department starts at 8 a. m. and is supposed to close at 3:30, but this has rarely happened. From the very beginning the engineers have been kept from 10 to 15 hours overtime a week and very often from 8 a. m. until 10 o'clock, or later, in the evening.

For this there is no reward in the way of extra pay or of time off and it insures no permanency of position, for, as soon as PWA starts to retrench, those will doubtless go first who have the least political prestige, irrespective of merit. Very often there is no work until 10 o'clock in the morning and often when they are kept in the later afternoon there is no work; they are retained in case there might be.

Employes in private industry have some redress but with the Government, unless one is in civil service there is none. It looks as if this condition would continue indefinitely unless it is brought to the attention of the public. A WORKER.
Washington, Aug. 20.

"Violence Is Risen Up."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Hard upon the President's utterances regarding any foreign domination in Canada, the question arises as to whether the great democratic commonwealths and their smaller sisters can continue to withstand much longer the ever rising pressure of autarchy. Probably no one yet is able to anticipate the answer to this grave international problem in spite of the superior economic and moral position of the democracies.

The root of the evil threatening the democratic bloc today antedates by more than a century the present revolt against it on the part of European and Asiatic totalitarian states. We must go back 123 years in order to discover the forces that have engendered the unbalance between the have and have-not nations. From 1815 to 1914 there had been developing side by side with the often checked spread of democratic ideas a reactionary Welt politik.

Doubtless sooner or later an impact will take place, and if the outcome does not annihilate the institutions which we and the other liberal nations possess in common, the United States and they will have to allow their increasingly abundant material wealth to be more equitably distributed among all nations. Thus the recent policies of Great Britain are an indication of this trend whereby she hopes to avoid possible extinction as a world power. This has been the price paid for peace so far.

An armed conflict between fascism and naziism on the one hand and the democracies on the other is almost a foregone conclusion that cannot be prevented within the next few years; in this event, although we would not like it, we could not win such a gigantic struggle without the help of the Soviets.

May I add the prophet Ezekiel's words? "Violence is risen up into a rod of wickedness: none of them shall remain, nor of their multitude, nor any of theirs: neither shall there be wailing for them." FIDES.

Tydings, O'Connor And George.

Tydings, O'Connor and George one day
Set out in an anti boat.
They said, "We will sail out consciences way
So long as this skiff will float."
"Where are you going, and what do you wish?"
The Big Shot asked them that.
"No more we'll bite with the sucker fish
Who swallow your fireside chat.
We've minds that still are our own, that's flat."
Said Tydings, O'Connor and George.

The Big Shot chortled a scornful song
As he witnessed the trio's stunt.
But the popular wind went right along
To hurry their little punt.
They were proving that other than sucker fish
Lived yet in the national sea.
"We will cast our votes as we damn well wish;
No longer afraid we'll be."
This the remark of the runaway three,
Tydings, O'Connor and George.

Over the Nation some men of mark
Already had flown the coop—
Such as Van Nuys and B. Champ Clark—
And nobody cared a whoop.
So the three called "Boo!" from their tory boat—
The Chief didn't think it could be.
He was certain they never could keep afloat
On a sucker-congested sea.
Tydings, O'Connor and George.

Tydings and George are Senator guys;
O'Connor a mick M. C.
The country applauded their bold defies
Of the p-u-r-g-e.
So settle right down and watch the show;
For a wonderful show 'twill be.
You'll see the defiance spread and grow
All over the national sea
Where the brave boat carries the terrorless three—
Tydings, O'Connor and George.

Bread And Zirconses.

IN the North Carolina countryside it has always been an adventure to go to the old mill. Sometimes when a wagonload of grain is to be taken to the miller the whole family goes along. The children especially love to hear the rumble of the mill machinery, smell the freshness of the flour and the white corn meal (yellow meal is for the Yankees) and, best of all, to watch the waterwheel spilling its jeweled stream into the mill race.

It is not every mill, however, even in North Carolina, which can offer such romance as that run by Roby Buchanan at the mountain village of Hawk.

Roby is enough of a mountaineer to be a romantic and a wanderer. All over Mitchell County and much farther afield he goes poking about in search of stones, if you please, not custom. Custom can wait. Like many another boy of this region, rich in minerals, Roby had spent days of truancy or vacation in seeking for the semi-precious aquamarines, garnets and "zirconses," which occur as by-products of the mines—feldspar, kaolin, mica operations—in the hills. By the time he was a man and the miller of Hawk, as his father had been before him, he had something of a collection of interesting and beautiful, if not particularly rare, stones.

Every State in the Union has its gems, according to Dr. Kunz, gem expert for the Natural History Museum of New York, but North Carolina can claim probably the greatest variety, having some 300 kinds of stones. Even a few diamonds have been found in North Carolina.

The bed of the creek that brings water for his mill, ditch banks, piles of pebbles and sand left by the road menders, and particularly the dump heaps of the mines—all these offer the grist for Roby Buchanan's gem-grinding mill; for he does grind gems in his mill.

At first he sold in the rough the crude colorful stones he had collected, saving the best to send away for cutting and polishing by experts; but cutting was expensive, and a miller who stops grinding corn or buckwheat to go gadding for garnets needs the purse of Fortunatus. No sooner thought than done. The lean blond miller, just like the Fortunatuses, Pied Pipers and the rest, was resourceful: He built an addition to his mill and ran a belt from the mill machinery to that which he had made himself for the cutting, facing and polishing of gems. Gem-cutting done by waterpower is something new under the sun; but at Hawk there is no other way, and it works!

Roby Buchanan still grinds corn and meal and buckwheat, cattle feed and chicken feed; but the greater part of his income is derived from traffic in jewels. Many people come in person, some of them bringing their own stones; many others write letters ordering finely cut and polished aquamarines, emeralds of a sort, amethysts, garnets, agates and zircons.

These stones were so little regarded that miners thought of them as nothing but a nuisance. Individual collectors, usually mountain lads, could not sell their treasures in the rough. Now they are so much in demand that Buchanan's hoard is all but exhausted, and many of his mail-order customers wait a long time for their turn.

Wanderer and romantic as he is, he is not without a sense of responsibility to his neighbors, the customers whom his father served. When the bottom of the flour barrel begins to show, and the last of the meal has gone with the pot-licker to feed the houn' dawgs, Roby must take time out for work. Bread is more important than zirconses. Times are often slack, however, and then, knapsack on back and stick in hand, the miller of Hawk goes a-wandering.

Those who know his lean figure, bending forward eternally like a muckraker seeking for dropped stars, may find him digging about in a feldspar dump or strolling along one of those red, mica-sparkled earth-banks of North Carolina. Now and then he picks up a pebble and sticks it in his pouch. Perhaps it is a sapphire or corundum; perhaps it is a bit of garnet, looking like a segment of red rock candy; perhaps it is one "of them thar girconses," red, too, and clear.

Roby loves them all, as he treads the hill trail toward the hid mountains. Tomorrow he will grind wheat for his neighbor's bread. Today has been given to zirconses. Could any man, even the third son of the fairy tale, ask for a happier life! MARION GRUBB.

Communist Threat.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It has been testified before the Dies committee that many persons holding responsible positions in the Government service are Communists, and that the WPA theater, operated with the taxpayers' money, is not only communistic, but that all the dramas presented by it are the rankest kind of communistic propaganda.

One would think that Mr. Roosevelt, if he is really interested in democracy and the preservation of our institutions, to which he gives much lip service, would immediately start a house-cleaning, and rid our Government of these enemies of our institutions and our Nation. A failure to act on his part encourages the belief that he is in sympathy with and supports the activities of these public enemies.

The revelations before the Dies committee are astounding, and indicate the perils confronting our country. Unless this peril is met promptly civil strife may result before long. AMERICAN.

Culture For Export.

THE PRESIDENT of the United States is the warden of his own tongue, but a reckless speech of the kind that he delivered last week at Kingston, Ont., may bring down dreadful consequences on his innocent subjects. In this case, it has happened, suddenly and terribly. Mr. Roosevelt's intemperate remarks about the brutality, as he perceives it, of the non-democratic countries, have offended the Bologna newspaper, Il Resta del Carlino, an official organ of the Fascist party, and thus a mouthpiece of Mussolini himself, and we are roughly denounced as a Nation of gangsters.

Well, truth to tell, we had it coming to us. We are a land of gangsters, and that in spite of the missionary work of the Unione Siliciana and of Al, Frank and Ralph Capone, Albert Anselmi and John Scalesi, and of Big Jim Colosimo, who brought us the pure racial culture of the Abruzzi Mountains and introduced efficiency and chain-store methods into the previously haphazard business of prostituting American girls from Midwest towns and farms on the old Chicago line. The business of brothel-keeping and seducing and transporting the native girls of this uncouth land has fallen into disorganization since Mr. Colosimo died under the fire of another missionary from the land of the Duce, and Big Jim's contribution to American civilization has been lost. Perhaps we were not yet ready for it.

THE BOLOGNA newspaper points out that Italy already had 20 centuries of civilization when an Italian discovered America, and has the benefit of 25 centuries now. A Colosimo, a Capone and their morals, culture and methods would be commonplace in a land of such ancient civilization. But they are a little advanced for us cultural parvenues, as we are called in Italy. But give us time and we may one day even adopt a government modeled on the lines sketched for us by Al Capone, whose prototype was the Duce himself.

We somehow have been uncordial to the missionary work of Johnny Torrio, that perfect flower of the civilization of old Milan, and we remain uncivilized and, much worse, a shade ungrateful, to a long roll of martyr missionaries who brought us such cultural refinements as back-stabbing, the one-way ride, the sack-trick, the concrete-block trick, the sawed-off gun fired from ambush, counterfeiting, extortion, the pineapple and, in one copious word, civilization.

• • • •

The roll of martyr missionaries is long and sad. Of the illustrious brothers Genna, of Chicago; three are dead, Mike the Devil, Bloody Angelo and Tony. Diamond Joe Esposito is dead. Gone are Frank Capone, Frankie Uale, Antonio Torchio, Sam Valente, Tony Russo, Tony Curringioni, Vincent Specussa, Joe Guinta, Joe Ferraro, Johnny Gaudino, Tony Lambardo and the Brothers D'Andrea—Tony, the counterfeiter, lawyer and politician, and Joe, the extortioner. No longer does Frankie Marlowe, of the slot machines, answer to his name. Schemer Drucci is dead. Felipe Gnolfo is dead.

Labriola, Cannelli, Raimondi, Oliveri, Tropea, Baldelli, Salmone, Nerone, Lolordo, Scalesi, Anselmi, Cavaretti, Alliotti, Laspisa, Contoni, Rizzitto, Sinacola—musical names, all, bespeaking the poetry of a beautiful civilization whose seeds they sowed on the barren ground of barbarian Chicago. All dead in the service of civilization but Scalesi and Anselmi, happily, had earthly riches as well as the treasures of the soul, and could pay, posthumously, to be returned to their dear Sicilian hills. There Mussolini, on his pastoral rounds, may salute them with upraised hand, and, perhaps, one day, adorn their graves with the insignia of the Order of the Crown, the same that he bestowed on Commendatore Tomaso Pendergast, of Kansas City, where Jim Colosimo's system of brothel-keeping is nurtured for a more cultural day in America.

• • • •

LET NOT our Swedes, the Irish, Germans or Jews of our community lay claim to works of the missionaries, living and dead, who came from that civilization which flowers now in the Duce's son, who bombed the unarmed Ethiopians and rejoiced at the beautiful flowers of smoke and flame. No Swede, Irishman, German or Jew ever bore the name of Tucillo, de Laurento, Tough Tony Califiori, Lucky Luciano, Cheeks Luciano, Montana, Mangano, Cosmano, Curozzo, Pepe or Johnny Genaro, James Belcastro, Rocco Fanelli, Danny Vallo, Altierie, Aiello, Nitti, Natti, Campagna, Canelli, Rio, Piazza, Camera, Geaquinta, Catanda, Maggio, Maltese, Pisona, Gambina, or Vicenzo Demora, known among the barbarian Americans by the tribal name of Machine-Gun Jack McGurn.

It is noble roster, and the local names of Little Hell and Death Corner in Chicago will be remembered in history and, perhaps, marked with monuments, as milestones on the rough road to the civilization of which the Duce makes not immodest boast at our expense.

The Federal Diary

By Scott Hart

Overtime

There was much talk some time ago about abolishing overtime in Federal agencies, and now among the many flagrant instances of overtime we hear that:

Twelve hundred hours of overtime work has been performed in the past 20 days by the personnel in the Civil Engineers' Office, United States Coast Guard. The work has been done under considerable pressure because the personnel was promised that the overtime work would be completed by August 15. Now it has been extended indefinitely. That's nice.

And no reason has been offered. Some Sundays and all of Saturdays have been utilized by the bosses in stringing up more hours on their underlings. The Treasury Department says that four hours constitute a day's work for Saturday, and when the public interest requires overtime, the employes should be compensated in kind. That is what the Treasury rules would have. But . . .

The C. G. bosses haven't promised any compensatory off-time, and no official orders have been shown to demonstrate that the employes have been officially asked or ordered to run up 1,200 hours of overtime in 20 days. Among the victims are architects, draftsmen, engineers and regular office personnel. It is sad.

• • • •

Having just recently delivered ourselves of an opus on the dryness of most Federal publications, we now eat crow, or is it the exception that proves the rule? In any event, our eyes were gladdened yesterday morning on reading this:

"The old gal isn't going to be what she used to be when the National Park Service gets through with her."

"Marvelous," we cried; they are about to set up a project to refurbish the American housewife! But not that, as yet. The release writer referred to the Statue of Liberty, now undergoing reconditioning at a cost of $250,000.

100 Courses Offered

The fine Agriculture Graduate School now sees a means of broadening its usefulness. Interest has been increased because of the June 24 executive orders which, among many other things, require educational training for employes. The facilities of the graduate school are open to all Federal people who are qualified to take the work. It cooperates with universities and educational institutions in certifying credits for work done in the school. Last year the registration reached 4,000, in 70 different courses. Something over 100 courses are announced for the year 1938-39. The list now is available at the office in the South Agriculture Building. Incidentally, the Civil Service Commission has not announced a precise policy about the educational training under the executive order provisions. It is presumed that the training will be in line with the work the individual daily performs.

Notes: George P. Frish, supervisor of C-5 Files, Veterans Administration, was reminded of his birthday recently by fellow workers. His desk was full of flowers of many varieties, grown by Mark Hill, one of the employes, at his Camp Springs, Md., home . . . Marie G. Callahan reminds of the meeting to be held at 3:45 p. m. tomorrow by U. F. W. A. Local 10 (S. S. B.), at the national headquarters. A speaker will come from the Group Health Association, and other discussion will include: How to place lawyers under civil service. One trustee will be elected, there will be a report on field organization, announcement of the photography contest and regular committee reports . . . The Veterans Administration has awarded a contract for marble and tile, to be used in the nurses' quarters at Mount Alto Hospital, to the United States Marble & Tile Co., of Washington. The amount: $2,179 . . . The 35 apprentices at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing have organized, socially. The officers are: President, Wallace Cauffman; vice president, Luis Atlee; secretary, J. H. Abercrombie, jr., and treasurer, Fletcher Reynolds. "We plan a series of social affairs for our members, many of whom are far from home," said the announcement . . . The G. A. O. News will be temporarily suspended, to be replaced with a new News Letter under auspices of N. F. F. E. Local 2. Lee H. Shugar will be the editor.

• • • •

The employe unions in Interior had better keep their notices off that classic easel used by the I. D. R. A. for its announcements. We understand the I. D. R. A. is getting tired of this business of having to tear down a union blast every time it wants to post a notice about a dance or lawn party.

• • • •

But the lawyers may have this consolation: No one understands all the implications in the Executive orders of June 24, which extend the merit system in Government. Indeed, no one understands but a little of it.

But let no one say the lawyers, the Government's finest, didn't wrestle over it. The cream of Uncle Sam's attorneys met at the Raleigh Hotel for luncheon yesterday at invitation of Solicitor General Robert H. Jackson. They didn't meet expressly to discuss the Executive orders.

They just drifted into the discussion, as all other Federal people do when two or more are assembled together. Then the wrestle began with lawyer pitted against Executive order technicality.

When it was over, they all decided to have Huntington Cairns, of the Treasury Department legal staff, head a committee to see what it could conclude.

'New Progressives'

By Ernest Lindley

Mr. Berle's Memorandum.

A GENTLE FLURRY of excitement has been caused by publication of the substance of a confidential memorandum on the monopoly investigation by Adolf A. Berle, jr., Assistant Secretary of State. Mr. Berle's memorandum was prepared in early July at the suggestion of several New Dealers, including two members of the Temporary National Economic Committee, which is conducting the monopoly investigation. It was not, therefore, an attack on that investigation.

Mr. Berle possesses one of the most original and penetrating minds in the Administration; and he has direct access to the President. But the importance of his suggestions concerning the monopoly investigation lies in the fact that he is representative of one of the main streams of New Deal thought. For convenience he may be labeled arbitrarily a "new-school progressive," to distinguish him from the "old-fashioned" progressives of the trust-busting type.

• • • •

IN A GENERAL WAY, all four of the chief members of Mr. Roosevelt's 1932 "brains trust" belonged to this newer school. Two of them, Raymond Moley and Hugh S. Johnson, have become such vigorous critics of Mr. Roosevelt's program that many of Mr. Roosevelt's lieutenants would dispute the right of either to designate himself as a progressive. A third member, Rexford G. Tugwell, is still widely regarded as having been more "radical" than anyone else in the upper circles of the New Deal.

Mr. Berle escaped tagging in the early days of the Roosevelt Administration by accepting no office. Instead he joined hands with Fiorello H. LaGuardia. As Mayor LaGuardia was elected with the help of conservative Republicans, his city chamberlain, Mr. Berle, was applauded for his ingenuity instead of being condemned for his unorthodox economic views. When Mr. Berle at last took office under Mr. Roosevelt, in February of this year, it was as Assistant Secretary of State.

The members of the original brains trust held divergent views on many specific policies. But they had in common a distrust of hard and fast economic creeds and a disposition to accept the fact that the American economy has become highly integrated. Both Mr. Tugwell and Mr. Berle had done some exploration to find out how our economic system really works, and both had develped a healthy skepticism of the old trust-busting formula.

• • • •

IN THE INNER CIRCLE of the Administration, the most persistent advocates of the older progressive tradition have been the lawyers of the Brandeis-Frankfurter school. The New Deal reforms in the field of private finance, such as the securities act, the securities and exchange act and the public utility holding company act, all stem from this tradition. But in considering the nonfinancial aspects of "monopoly," the New Deal has oscillated. The present movement is toward the old-fashioned defense of competition and the small businessman, advocated by Tom Corcoran, Robert H. Jackson — and Senator Borah. And from this movement has sprung the present monopoly investigation.

In theory, Mr. Berle, or Jerome N. Frank, another brilliant thinker of the new progressive school, stands far apart from Robert H. Jackson, with his strong sentimental attachment to the small businessman. But, on close examination, their differences do not seem irreconcilable They seem to be agreed on a fundamental point: That uncontrolled private collectivism cannot be tolerated.

In his message asking for the monopoly investigation, President Roosevelt pu the point this way: "The power of a few to manage the economic life of the Nation must be diffused among the many or be transferred to the public and its democratically responsible Government. If prices are to be managed and administered, if the Nation's business it to be allotted by plan and not by competition, that power should not be vested in any private group or cartel, however benevolent its professions profess to be."

• • • •

THERE SEEMS to be agreement also on another fundamental point: That, as the President said, "the enforcement of free competition is the least regulation business can expect."

Probably all the Administration members of the monopoly committee would assent to Mr. Berle's conclusion, which was quoted in this column on August 3, that "the answers will be different in different fields." In some fields a high degree of competition can be preserved or restored, in some the establishment of controlled cartels may be more practicable, in others public ownership—of "yardstick" or of a whole industry—may recommend itself.

Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold has warned on several occasions that present conditions are pushing the United States toward a highly centralized industrial state like Germany or Italy. He prefers a more competitive economy like that of Sweden. But the Swedish economy, as Mr. Arnold knows, is not the small business man's paradise celebrated by the orthodox American trust-buster. It is a mixed economy, which includes strong consumers' co-operatives, agricultural producers' co-operatives, a considerable area of state socialism, an area of semisocialism in which the state and private interests work as partners, a strong trade union organization, and subsidies for certain enterprises.

By going light on theory and striving for agreement on the most practical ways to deal with specific situations, the monopoly investigation can resolve many of the conflicts in ideas in the Roosevelt Administration—and in the Nation.

Strange Harmony!

We are blushing all over, but we just can't help it: we find ourselves for once in complete and even violent agreement with Westbrook Pegler. They are planning to erect a gigantic statue of St. Francis of Assisi in San Francisco, from a design of Benjamin Bufano; apparently the WPA is implicated in one way or another. Mr. Pegler has pointed out that if published drawings of the proposed statue are accurate, it is going to look perfectly terrible. Mr. Pegler is right, and so are the many other people who also raised immediate and violent objection. The statue, with both arms aloft, violates the most elementary of all the rules of art, that you must not portray an immobile figure in a position which would cause great anguish if sustained for more than a few minutes. And in any case, the last thing San Francisco needs is a gigantic statue, which would be dwarfed by its two vast bridges. We hope that the project will be treated as somebody's far from happy thought and that no more will be heard of it.—From an editorial in the New Republic.

Books And Things

By Lewis Gannett.

Whimsy And Verse.

"WE MARRIED AN ENGLISHMAN" (Carrick and Evans, $2.75)—it is a flip title which Ruth and Helen Hoffman, twins, give their books. It is a flip book; and the line drawings which illuminate it have a Thurberish flipness all their own. And, like Thurber's drawings, something more. For all its insouciant flipness. "We Married an Englishman" is unobtrusively an essay on civilizations, Eastern and Western.

They are Americans, these twins; and the Englishman whom one of them marries—Ruth and Helen never acquire the slightest hint of distinguishable individuality in the course of the book, and seem equally to resent the inevitable inquiry "How do you tell yourselves apart?" The Englishman excavates gravel for a dam which is some day to restore greenness to the brown valley of the Tigris. Douglas himself has little personality. All Arabs look alike in the drawings, and sound alike in the text. But before you are done, you know that Arabs and Americans are not alike, though a couple of female American twins with a line can get along anywhere on this various earth.

They arrived with 34 pieces of baggage, and two Siamese cats, did these twins; and the place in which they arrived was 200 miles from the nearest mop. They proceeded to enjoy it and, somewhat, to Americanize it. When Christmas came, they did the best they could, with lemons for tinsel balls, and Lux for snow, and pomegranate jelly instead of cranberry. They revised the house, introducing an American chimney which turned out to be useful only as an exercise ground for the cats (the cats, from two, grew to nine, but fell away to one after the girls discharged Muhammed. Muhammed stayed just long enough to poison all the pets except Girlcat, who was sick that day).

• • • •

"WE," recognized, however, that though East be East and West West, the twain do meet whenever they entered the home of a Moslem sheik pronounced ("shake"). And, being American girls, they entered almost everywhere, chatting chummily with the king and thoroughly inspecting half the harems on the Tigris.

The story of the difficulties of Christian marriage in Irak runs like a thread through the book. Mud and consuls conspired to delay the nuptials. For a ring, Ruth—or was it Helen?—arranged with two skilled descendants of John the Baptist to melt down some old Turkish money and copy the design of a Woolworth earring (cost, $7). Apparently, the honeymoon consisted of a night in which "Douglas" and "we"—both of "us"—and a few Arabs were stuck in mud in their car. It was very different from some of the wedding nights carefully reported by the servants.

A strange, annoying and intriguing book. It has a flavor and a charm all its own.

SELDEN RODMAN, editor of "A New Anthology of Modern Poetry" (Random House, $3), is almost unique among anthologists in his realization that good poetry may be frivolous, and be almost accidental. His anthology includes not only Gerard Manley Hopkins and W. B. Yeats, Auden and Spender and C. Day Lewis, but also Ogden Nash, Dorothy Parker and E. B. White. It opens a section to "the most original and indigenous American art," the Negro spirituals, and among them appears "I hate to see de evenin' sun go down." It recognizes the worth of the poems for children in Stephen and Rosemary (not Laura, as here strangely appears) Benet's "Book of Americans." (I wish it had found space for Rosemary's exquisite Nancy Hanks.) It will be memorable as an anthology because it is the first to recognize two great American poems: Pare Lorentz's script for "The River," with its refrain "We built a hundred cities and a thousand towns . . . We cut the top off the Alleghenies and sent it down the river . . . And moved on;" and Bartolomeo Vanzetti's Last Speech to the Court.

It was 11 years ago this week that Vanzetti was executed; and still his words ring. They have been recognized before as great prose; Mr. Rodman is the first to print them as poetry:

If it had not been for these things
I might have lived out my life
Talking at street corners to scorning men.
I might have died, unmarked, unknown, a failure.
Now we are not a failure.
This is our career and our triumph.
Never
In our full life could we hope to do such work
For tolerance, for justice, for man's understanding
Of man, as now we do by accident.
Our words, our lives, our pains—nothing!
The taking of our lives—lives of a good shoemaker and a poor fish peddler—
All! That last moment belongs to us.
That agony is our triumph.

Europeans Are Calm

By Europax

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Only Diplomats And Investors Seem Worried.

Paris.

WITH SUPRISINGLY little alarm or excitement, Europe is entering the most dangerous period of postwar history—from the end of August to the end of October.

Except for the uneasiness and diplomatic tension aroused by the "mobilization maneuvers" in Germany, continental Europeans are going into this crucial time calmly. There has been no apparent curtailing of holiday travel—on the contrary, it has been a record season. France is full of British and Americans. Many French people left in mid-August for tours of Germany and central Europe, and several tourists from the United States have exclaimed to me, "What a relief to be over here in this peaceful atmosphere, away from the war scares of the newspapers at home!"

Of course, such naivete cannot be taken too seriously. Many innocents were caught abroad in August, 1914. Nevertheless, the fact remains that in France and most other European countries, the general public has so far displayed a freedom from panicky fear—aside from nervousness on the part of some investors—that is both commendable and reassuring.

• • • •

THIS ABSENCE of panic is all the more significant because it can hardly be based on ignorance of the seriousness of the situation. In 1914 very few people outside diplomatic and governmental circles were really aware of the gravity of the war threat. Today very few people can possibly be unaware of the potential dangers to peace likely to be encountered in the next couple of months.

The primary peril, of course, is in central Europe. During the latter part of August and the whole of September — perhaps longer — Germany will be on a virtual war footing, with nearly 1,500,000 men actively engaged in military maneuvers. When it is recalled that Hitler has said the Czechoslovakian affair of the Sudetens must be settled by fall, the implications of this semimobilization become uncomfortably clear.

Clearer still is the meaning of the haste with which Germany is pushing the fortification of her western frontier. Between 300,000 and 400,000 workers have been drafted from their normal occupations and put to work building forts, blockhouses, machine-gun nests, artillery emplacements and airplane bases along the entire stretch of Franco-German frontier.

• • • •

OBVIOUSLY HITLER wants to make it difficult, if not impossible, for France to attack her. But why is the work being rushed to completion, the date set being variously estimated as August 31 and September 15? Everything certainly points to a plan to cover the western border securely so as to leave Hitler free to go ahead with his projects regarding Czechoslovakia and the rest of central Europe.

Let no one be under any illusions as to Germany's aim in Czechoslovakia. Hitler is inexorably determined on two points: (1) To bring the great bulk of the 3,500,000 Sudeten Germans under the direct control of the Reich, either by outright absorption or by complete territorial autonomy; and (2) to reduce the rest of Czechoslovakia to a second Switzerland, isolated diplomatically from both Russia and France, and economically dominated by Germany.

The only question is, how long will Hitler be willing to wait before attempting to obtain these objectives? A well-informed German official in Paris whose predictions I have found surprisingly accurate in the past, insists that Hitler has no intention of hurrying at the risk of precipitating a general war. He appears genuinely convinced that the Fuhrer will bide his time and choose his moment to strike with unfailing judgment. Meanwhile, all such moves as the present maneuvers and the hasty erection of new fortifications in the west, are simply preparations designed to leave Hitler free to act when the psychological moment arrives, and also perhaps to help on its arrival.

• • • •

IN OTHER WORDS, according to this theory, Germany is still following its same policy of the past five years, a policy of power diplomacy, building up its military strength and pushing on behind that show of force as far and as fast as possible, but stopping just short of any step that would precipitate a general European war.

The trouble with this power diplomacy, of course, is that it always seems to lead to war. One false step, one mistaken estimate of the reaction of another country, and the damage is done. With all his somnambulistic sure-footedness, can Hitler hope to avoid that one fatal misstep, sooner or later?

There are several courses events may take in the coming weeks. These maneuvers, with their unprecedented peacetime requisitioning of civilians, cars, horses and supplies, must lead to something. They have cost too much—disturbed the economic life of the nation too deeply—not to produce some tangible result.

One possible fruit might be the sudden annexation of Memel. This Nazi-controlled port in Lithuania, not far from East Prussia, has long been coveted by Germany. Von Ribbentrop, German minister of foreign affairs, is known to have told several of his English friends—he still has a few!—recently that "Germany is much more immediately interested in Memel than in the Sudeten Germans."

• • • •

IT IS HARD to believe, however, that all Germany's military preparations are not more directly concerned with Czechoslovakia. His intensive fortifying of the western frontier seems to speak clearly to France and England: "You stopped me from invading Czechoslovakia on May 21 by threatening to attack me from the rear if I did. But now, you see, I am all ready for you to attack me if you dare. You called my bluff last May—now I'm calling yours!"

And it cannot be denied that this intense reinforcement of the Rhineland fortifications put France in a cruel dilemma.

There are plenty of people who believe that France, faced with this added obstacle to helping the Czechs, would not march if Hitler struck at Prague. My own impression, based on careful inquiry, is that if Germany were to invade Czechoslovakia, and the Czechs put up serious resistance, even for a few days—long enough for France to mobilize, the French would in the end come to the aid of Prague.

• • • •

AT THE SAME TIME it is true that Britain is doing everything imaginable to avoid such a denouement. Runciman was sent to Prague with instructions to drag out the negotiations indefinitely, until October, if possible, in the hope of tiding Europe over this danger period. Furthermore, Premiere Neville Chamberlain is doing his best to distract Hitler from a Czech coup by dangling before his eyes the prospect of a deal on the question of colonies.

Only a bold prophet would hazard a guess as to the state of Europe two months from now. Personally, I shall certainly not be so bold. But the relative calm, sangfroid and confidence of the people—as distinguished from governments and press in France, England and elsewhere in Europe, seem to me a very reassuring sign. War is never inevitable. Peace can still prevail.

"Well, do you think they'll convict Jimmy Hines?"

"Not on that testimony of 'Spasm' Berry and 'Bo' Lilienthal."

"It certainly is an interesting trial."

"Yeah. I got a lot of laughs out of that fellow Big Red El Chico, who said he only knew the alphabet from A to Z and denied he ever told the grand jury he would go to war for Canada in case of invasion."

• • • •

"Dewey is making a good fight."

"Yeah, but I think Tydings will beat him, despite Roosevelt's indorsement."

"Just what did Roosevelt say?"

"I forget the details. All I remember is that he read an editorial about purging a lottery game in some place called Sudeten."

"What do you think of the big league baseball race now?"

"The Giants are having plenty of trouble."

"They ain't got a chance now with Dutch Hubbell out."

"What happened to him?"

"It was a purge or something. The President said he was a gentleman and a scholar, but too conservative for a big league pitcher."

"I see where Cordell Ickes is calling for world peace again."

"That was a good speech he made dedicating that bridge up in Canada, but I think he made a mistake in telling Premier "Dixie" McKenzie that he could always count on us if he got into trouble."

"What kind of trouble was he talking about?"

"It was something to do with Tammany Hall and the St. Lawrence River. I think the testimony was that some fellow named Ison said he would deepen the waterway if he could get $125 a week for a campaign fund."

• • • •

"Are you following this testimony before the House committee on red activities in this country?"

"Gee! According to those witnesses, the Communists are behind every association except the Elks, the Girls Friendly Society and the Tuesday Bridge Club."

"One man—I think his name was O'Connor or something—told the committee that even the One Eye League was a Russian organization and that Apple Week was really started in Moscow, the whole idea being to get the Government to buy that Tennessee marble."

"They had a lot of big names on those membership lists, didn't they?"

"I was surprised to see War Admiral mentioned."

"Yeah, and that big college president, what's his name?"

"A. Tisket Taskett?"

"That's the feller."

Johnson Foresees Road to Alaska Soon

Seattle, Aug. 23 (AP). — Alaska is ready to trade its isolation for closer contact with the United States via the proposed Canada-Alaska highway, according to Louis Johnson, Assistant Secretary of War.

Johnson returned today in an Army plane from Alaska with J. Monroe Johnson, Assistant Secretary of Commerce, and Senator Reynolds (Democrat), North Carolina. He predicted the proposed Alaska highway would be a reality within a short time.

Aiding Face Circulation Youth Help

You Can Let Beauty Go to the Head While You're Reducing.

Simple Exercises Will Bring Blood Flow to Head.

By Ida Jean Kain.

THERE IS a grand new way to let beauty go to your head while you are reducing. With so many women, the weight loss "shows in the face," and that takes all the joy out of the lost poundage. But if you take your exercise in what Ann Delafield calls the beauty angle, your reducing can make you a younger and prettier woman.

Keeping young depends on circulation, and improved circulation is the reason women look a lot younger than they used to. Why, we can remember when a girl was an old maid at 25, and now a woman's best years are from 30 to 40 . . . all because in the flapper period the girls began to kick up their heels and that stimulated their circulation and they've been looking younger ever since! But just when we begin to need a circulation jog the most we have to abandon kicking up our heels as a concession to convention, so Miss Delafield has come to our rescue with the beauty angle. The idea is to restore the balance of circulation and to help us grow younger looking instead of older.

Dried Up Faces.

This is the way she explains it: At the end of the day when our faces look older and thinner, the whole trouble is a lack of fresh blood to the face. The small artery which carries the blood to the face is only about the size of a lead pencil, while the blood flows away from the face and throat through a vein as big as two man-size thumbs. And that's why faces get as old looking as a dried-up apple.

The idea back of standing on your head for beauty was, apparently, not so far wrong. One objection is that most of us cannot stand on our heads, and another is that in this position too much pressure is exerted on that little artery. In the beauty angle, you just lie down and take it easy with your feet about 45 degrees higher than your head, while a fresh flow of blood into the throat and face nourishes these tissues—and that's the only way they can be nourished!

Lie On Table.

The ideal way is to lie on an especially constructed table tilted at the proper angle. You can either lie on your back on the floor and prop the lower part of your back up with two pillows from the davenport, or you can prop up the foot of a small bed.

And while you are getting beautiful in this position, take an exercise to flatten the tummy. First, flex your knees. Then, expelling all the air from the lungs, jerk the chest up. This automatically flattens the tummy. Hold, and release. You also do a hip-slimming exercise by raising one leg, bending the knee and touching the knee to the mat on the other side of the body.

If you are over 25, you don't want to miss this beauty trick, for, frankly, I think it is the best one I have come across in a long time. Spend 15 to 20 minutes every day with your heels higher than your head and see if it doesn't make you look and feel younger.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Girl Would Save Money, Yet Must Support Mother; Which of the Two Should Be Penalized?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My problem is financial. I am 24 years old. My uncle and aunt (who, for years, supported my mother and me after father's death) gave me a stenographic education in self defense. As I grew old enough to know where our support came from, I was deeply ashamed of being the recipient of so much charity, and got a job as soon as I was out of business school. For two years I supported mother, on a salary of $15 a week, paying $30 a month rent. Then the job folded.

* * * *

When I got the call to Washington from the Civil Service, my expenses doubled. The first half year I was here I sent so much home that not one penny was saved. It took all my salary to live and send home $35 a month (as my uncle expected me to do.) The job was temporary, but sheer luck kept me in jobs, and had I gotten out of a job, I would have been stranded, penniless. Then I ran away and married, later leaving my husband. But marriage set me free from family domination.

* * * *

My relatives were enraged by my daring to get married and cut loose to live my own life. Only since I won that freedom have I had any clothes not home-made. When I came here I looked like a country hick with the straw still in my hair. Now I have a probational job, and while my relatives expect me to send mother $25 a month, it is out of the question to send more than $15. I attend night school (to gain speed), am making payments on a typewriter, pay fairly high board in a good section of the city and my living expenses are more than double what they were back home. I have to keep well groomed, and do, yet the most expensive dress I own cost only $3.

* * * *

My uncle is now helping to support my mother. Yet, if she had an earned income of only $15 a month (earned through her own efforts), she could manage without his help. The instant I suggest she look for work, she stiffens and her bristles rise. She is very snooty toward the things she might do, much as caring for children or elderly persons, and refuses to consider them, as they "bore" her. She won't seek help of employment agencies, objecting to age revelation and saying they ask too many questions about your private affairs. She is hurt if the subject of work is seriously mentioned, and gets offended.

* * * *

I know that as soon as my relatives (who have always looked on me as a black sheep) learn that I cannot send her over $15 a month, they are going to blacklist me again—permanently, this time. I am not ungrateful to them. I love and honor them, even though I am always getting my cousins thrown up to me as perfect angels—proper, intelligent children—even by my own mother. But I simply can't send home $30 a month, for it would take all my salary to do so and I'd not be able to save 1 penny. And I must save something, if only $15 a month. The one solution to this problem is my mother's working—and she can make cunning cuddly dolls and beautiful artificial flowers. She has a real talent for that sort of thing. Is there any field in which this could be done to enable her to earn $15 a month? She is in her early 60s, but healthy and young in spirit and can do light work.

* * * *

One thing I know—I am not going to let myself be again made into a shabby slave, with one penny in the bank for a crisis, subject to relatives' domination, as I was before my marriage set me free to live my own life. I've just begun to find myself, to develop my personality on my own—and I'm going to need a saving margin to conserve that independence when the storm breaks over my head, as it will when my relatives learn I can't assume mother's full support.

APPREHENSIVE.

The First Obligation.

DEAR APPREHENSIVE: My slant on this situation is at variance with yours. Considering the circumstances, I believe your obligation to support your mother comes ahead of your right to save money against a hypothetical rainy day in your own life. Although you profess to dislike your relatives' charity, the $15 a month you would be withholding according to the program outlined above, would be money that came, indirectly, out of their pockets.

* * * *

As a woman in the early sixties, who has had no vocational training or experience, your mother is rather hopelessly unemployable, and no doubt would be so classified by the average employment agency, particularly in view of her ill-concealed aversion to work outside the home. As her nearest of kin, closer even than her brother (for such I assume your uncle to be), you are legally and morally responsible for supplying her with the necessities of life, if she cannot provide them for herself.

* * * *

Don't let the new freedom found across the threshold of matrimony cause you to lose sane and honorable perspective. Marriage should free one from parental domination, but it does not absolve one of the filial obligation to keep an elderly, indigent parent from want. Consider the fact that your mother, now in her middle 60s, hasn't a great many more years to live. Her life expectancy may conservatively be reckoned at around ten more years. At 24, you are young enough to be her granddaughter, almost, and the greatest contribution you can make to your own character development and conscience is to take care of her now, at some self-sacrifice if necessary. Time enough later to think altogether in terms of your own greatly desired self advancement and self development.

* * * *

As between sending her $15 and thus penalizing your relatives and earning their lasting disfavor and hers, and sending her $25 or $30 and stinting yourself to do it—I think you might much better do the latter and accept the necessitous sacrifice as a challenge to go forth into the market place and elevate your earning powers. Your grim determination to save money is admirable; it bespeaks a character that is bound to succeed; but don't make the mistake of supposing that money in the bank is the only, or greatest, security. The good will of those with whom one has dealt fairly and generously is equally protective. It's the old story of bread cast upon the waters coming back greatly multiplied in one's own time of need. Put more trust in God, show more faith in yourself and don't lean too heavily on the so-called almighty dollar. Apprehension is a mighty poor mental approach to the solution of any problem—and particularly those having to do with finances. M. H.

It Buttons All the Way Down

Drawing by E. C. Goulard.

YOUR wool dress, like your hat, can either make or break you. Given the right lines and details it can provide more verve than any other type of costume. Or it can be drab and commonplace. The cashmere jersey frock shown above has many of the little touches that make a dress distinctive. For one thing, it buttons all the way down the front. For another, it has an unusual neckline, jaunty sleeves and interesting pleats. An ideal selection for school or office.

PLEASANT HOMES

Modern Bedroom Takes on More Daytime Functions.

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

We've not suggesting that bedrooms really go back to their full former importance in the social order. Time was in France when bedrooms were used for receiving callers and delegations, and it even got so that an official proclamation, to have proper dignity, had to be delivered from a bed—some of the Bourbon kings even went so far as to have their beds carried into State halls in order to hold forth with fitting ceremony. But we can't quite see John Garner or Cabot Lodge laying down the law from a fancy bed!

We do advocate, however, that bedrooms come out of the moth balls and be used for something more than places to sleep. And leading decorators we interviewed agree. They're practicing what they preach by designing bedrooms that have a leisurely graciousness with arrangements for reading or writing, for breakfast or tea.

Sociable Spot.

The trend toward the more leisurely bedroom is expressed first of all in the growing use of the chaise longue or an easy chair and hassock combination When a chaise lonque arrangement isn't used a pair of small arm chairs with a table between them is a favorite idea, thus creating a sociable spot for intimate talk for breakfast or a cup of tea in the sag of the afternoon.

The use of tables of respectable size is increasing, too, and so in addition to bedside tables you'll often find a large drum table or a drop leaf. A coffee table is a pretty nice idea in a bedroom. too, if you stop to think about it One or a pair of unusual plant stands vary and refresh a bedroom scene.

Places For Books.

Literary lights and fans like to have a place for books in their bedrooms. Hanging shelves are a pet solution—very decorative they are too. What-nots have quite a pleasant air in bedrooms and they're just about the right size for the number of books to be kept here. Lots of people like a desk in a bedroom; it does vary the effect pleasantly and can be very useful.

Similar Interests Help Marriage, Insists Actress

Harriet Hilliard Refutes the 'Professional Jealousy' Theory.

THE CAREER woman's best aids for a successful marriage are a sense of humor and the control of her temper, believes Harriet Hilliard, stage, screen and radio singer now appearing in Washington. Miss Hilliard should know because she is the wife and professional coworker of the orchestra leader, Ozzie Nelson. They will celebrate their third wedding anniversary this October and they are the parents of a 22-month son, David.

Another explanation for the couple's companionable marriage is what Miss Hilliard calls "just sheer luck"—the fact that both of them share the same interests and are so close in their daily associations. As a result of this happy marriage, Nelson was recently inspired to write the popular song, "Remember Me." In the dreary hours of curtain calls when all are rushed and kept at a fast pace, both of these stage people are able to live happily and in perfect harmony.

This actress insists that jealousy should never play a role in the lives of any couple whose work lies in similar fields, as does hers and her husband's. "Intelligence and patience can iron out all difficulties that arise as partners in marriage and a profession," she said. "Husband and wife should be proud of each's success and be willing to cooperate in furthering their chances for future popularity."

"The Boy in the Three-Cornered Pants" is a song written and dedicated by Nelson to his small son, David. The latter will not be raised scientifically, according to his mother, but will be allowed to adjust himself as a normal child to his surroundings. A trust fund has been started by his parents so that he will have a chance for future achievements. Miss Hilliard insists now that her young son will attend college.

Easy to please are the Nelsons when it comes to food, as they prefer plain, solid dishes, disliking all fancy foods. Miss Hilliard has a great liking for real Chinese food and adores all Jewish dishes, especially the Jewish method of frying chickens. As they travel around a great deal this singer does not have any time for cooking, although she would like to cook. While leading a colorful and compact life, she still has time to care for her son, sing as the featured vocalist in her husband's orchestra and live normally.

'Bowler' Dress Shown For Indoor Sports

For active indoor sports, a new type of dress is being shown, called the "bowler" dress. A shirtwaist of nonstretch, nonsag jersey, is combined with a half-skirt, half-culotte. The skirt at the back gives the wearer a nice line, and for such active sport as bowling, the divided skirt in front is the perfect answer.

Skiiing togs for winter have a Christmasy note, in that a cellophane thread, woven into the fabric, gives a sparkle reminiscent of snow.

Birds Are Feature Of New Paris Hats

Paris (U.P.).—Birds of all feathers flock together when it comes to millinery styles. Schiaparelli has just enough room on a doll's hat to perch a little bird. Two white swan tail feathers soar from the top of a white grosgrain toque made by Blanche et Simon. A white cockatoo, complete with head, sits precariously on the top of a navy blue twisted turban fashioned by Rose Valois. Louise Bourbon makes a black felt tricorn and trims it with a tiny "feather duster" of multicolored ostrich plumes.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

IT TAKES us quite a while to catch on, here in N'Yawk. Hundreds of thousands of sturdy young ladies have been playing softball all over the Republic, including many on our own sandlots, but it was only the other day that this frantic sport moved into Madison Square Garden — home of political conventions, grunting wrasslers, circuses, box fights, concerts, basketball and anything that makes a nickel. And I went—and wouldn't have missed it for Uncle Eph's quarter-section!

ALICE HUGHES.

There were a million laughs, in the two games, and I got my share. Three or four thousands wildly-rooting people watched this manly sport, performed by husky girls I'd like to have on my side in any fight. The big show was an international brawl between the Montreal Maroons and New York's own Roverettes, a tough bunch of youthful Amazons. Owing to the utter inability of Miss Edith Hineson, the tall, ladylike Montreal hurler, to find homeplate, the Canadians took a fine shellacking, in spite of the pompous pregame ceremonies, wherein a soprano sang "The Maple Leaf Forever" and "The Star-Spangled Banner" while lights played on the two flags.

The rooting delighted me. "Come on, Honey," was a pet cheer, as a gal dashed for home, and one fan cheered a particularly hard-looking contestant by hollering "Attagirl, Dead End!" And the misses play with bitter seriousness—beefing to the umpire on decisions, gritting their chewing gum and swinging from their toes at the ball, and getting very hot and unlovely at it. The most comical thing I saw was the tactics of the infielders when a pitcher hits a wild streak. They all come in to confer with the unhappy tosser, and instead of putting their arms around her shoulder, as the men do, they give her gentle, comforting pats on the derriere. It's a great show, and I hope it is in the Garden to stay for a while. It's great to see husky girls playing a silly game for life or death.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN — The gambling ban at Saratoga has certainly played hob with the night-life of the spa. The big clubs like Piping Rock are suffering from the righteousness blight, and many a famed and costly entertainer can't be payed off. Bandleader Vincent Lopez has a contract which still had five weeks to go, and Schnozzle Jimmy Durante, the clown, was forced to tear up papers which would have brought him $4,000 a week. The nags gallop, and the bands play, and the beautiful women parade the paddock with the horses, but the dear old town hasn't thriven without the click of the roulette pill and the clack of the bounding ivory dominoes.

Second-generation theater gets another recruit. Judy Abbott, 16-year-old daughter of George Abbott, hit-producer of such smacks as "Boy Meets Girl," "Brother Rat" and "Room Service," is about to make her bow in "What a Life," Pop's current comedy hit about high school kids, now running in town. Trouper blood tells again, for George was a pretty good actor himself. I remember the big blond as far back as "Dulcy"—and what a show that was!

A famous sight and landmark is leaving us, knocked over by progress. That's the great Paterno Castle, which for many years has stood on a cliff above Riverside drive far uptown. It has been the stronghold of Charles V. Paterno, of a fabulously rich building family. Now the turreted castle gives way to five 12-story apartment buildings. And another landmark turns to dust and rubble.

Since this is the time of year for fall fashion forecasts—most of which go goofy later—one big avenue store hints it may be a Scottish fall. It bases this Caledonian note on the fact that it is now pushing pleated plaid woolen skirts to go with matching fleece-lined jackets. Nice hint for school, as they are pretty. Now look out for an Irish fall—leather jackets a la Corrigan!

D. C. Colony Still Intact In Cape Cod Resorts

Lothrop Stoddards Are Hosts at 'Washington Party.'

By Hope Ridings Miller.
The Post Society Editor.

As the fag end of summer rolls around and vacationing residents begin to roll in from beach and mountain resorts, the Washington colony on Cape Cod apparently remains intact with no indications of breaking up until after Labor Day.

Yesterday afternoon an informal gathering at Pine Knoll, West Dennis, had a noticeable Capital accent when Mr. and Mrs. Lothrop Stoddard's cottage was the scene of a "Washington cocktail party." Over from Bass River came Mrs. Charles Pynchon and her daughter, Miss Anne Ellis, and from their cottage nearby came Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Gordon.

Mr. and Mrs. Gould Lincoln, who have a cottage at Quissett, Cape Cod, also were among the guests; as were Mrs. Barbara Russell and her young daughter, Joan. While Mrs. Russell is not strictly a local resident, she spends much time in the Capital and plans to be here this winter while her daughter is in school. Well known both here and in Boston, Mrs. Russell formerly was Miss Barbara Barnett, of Boston, daughter of the late R. A. Barnett, who was a noted composer.

Stoddards to Return Early in October

Since the Stoddards opened their cottage in West Dennis early in the summer, a steady stream of guests have dropped by to see them. Every week-end has seen their attractive cottage filled with friends either from Washington or Boston. According to present plans, Mr. and Mrs. Stoddard will keep open their place on Cape Cod through next month, and plan to return to their house in Georgetown early in October.

Meanwhile, however, Mrs. Stoddard will leave West Dennis early next week for a visit with her aunt, Mrs. William Rice, in Dublin, N. H. The latter lives in a quaint home known as the Old Parsonage. It was the setting of this country's first free public library, which was started by one of Mrs. Rice's ancestors.

But back to Cape Cod. Some of the most recent visitors there were Mrs. Horatio Hackett, now of New York, but formerly of Washington, who stopped over a few days ago in Bass River and is now motoring through Massachusetts with Mrs. Seton Post, the former Comtesse de Montgelas, a sister of Mrs. Pynchon.

Anne Ellis Stars In Tennis Tournament

Mrs. Hackett, Mrs. Post, Mrs. Pynchon and Mr. and Mrs. Stoddard were among spectators at the recent tennis tournament at Wianno, the Newport of Cape Cod. Anne Ellis, who is one of Washington's top-flight tennis players, participated in the event and was one of the runners-up for the doubles championship. Reports from Wianno indicate that the tournament was one of the most thrilling sports classics of Massachusetts summer season.

Speaking of Massachusetts . . . from the North Shore—exclusive Magnolia, to be exact—comes word that Percy Atherton has been there for several weeks recovering from his severe illness in the spring, and that he plans to be back in Washington to spend the winter.

Spending Summer on Long Island; Later to Live in New York

Hessler Studio.

MR. AND MRS. FRANCIS P. GARVAN, formerly a popular Capital couple, are spending the summer at Roslyn House, Roslyn, Long Island. In the autumn they will move to New York City to make their home. They left early this season after Mr. Garvan finished his law course at Georgetown University. Mrs. Garvan, before her marriage last year, was Miss Hope Jackson, daughter of Robert Jackson, former secretary of the Democratic National Committee.

Society Matron Back From Trip

Mrs. Ralph Worthington Returns to Supervise Tree Planting.

To supervise the planting of trees and shrubbery at her country home in Virginia, Mrs. Ralph Worthington has returned to Washington for a few days, but will be off again shortly for a cooler spot—just where she has not yet definitely decided. She has been visiting her older daughter, Mrs. Adam Luke, and Mr. Luke at their place in Greenwich, Conn.

Miss Ethel Worthington and her brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Worthington 3d, are at present visiting Miss Emily Davis, of Washington, at her summer home at Watch Hill. They will leave tomorrow for Nantucket, where they hope to do some sailing, and where they will remain until shortly after Labor Day.

Miss Worthington's marriage to William Coad, of Omaha, Nebr., will take place the latter part of October.

Anna Hardeman Meade Weds Minnigerode in Singapore

Bride Is Junior Leaguer; Wedding Unites Prominent Families; Couple to Honeymoon in Cammeron Highlands, Malaya.

All the way from Singapore comes word of the marriage there on Monday afternoon of Miss Anna Hardeman Meade of Birmingham, Ala., to H. Gordon Minnigerode, American Vice Consul at Singapore and son of Mr. and Mrs. C. Powell Minnigerode of this city.

The wedding unites two prominent families. The bride, daughter of Hardeman Sessions Meade, is a Junior Leaguer who spent several years in Washington in a New Deal job. Mr. Minnigerode, sr. is director of the Corcoran Gallery of Art, and the family is one of Washington's oldest.

The bride left Washington more than a year ago to seek adventure in China, where she found it in the form of war, which broke out shortly after her arrival. Returning to Washington via India and Europe, she met here her future husband, who was assigned temporarily to the State Department at that time. Their engagement was announced last spring just before he sailed back for China, where his bride, her father, and Miss Janet Baxter, of New York, joined him August 16.

Wedding Held In Cathedral

The ceremony, which was attended by members of the diplomatic corps, the American colony and friends of the bride and bridegroom in and around Singapore, was held at St. Andrews Cathedral. The Arch Deacon, the Rev. Graham White, officiated.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, had as her only attendant Miss Baxter. Kenneth S. Patton, the United States Consul General at Singapore, was best man. He attended the University of Virginia with an uncle of the bride.

Mr. and Mrs. Patton gave a reception for the couple at their home immediately after the wedding.

Rural Mail Wives Hold Own Session

Tree Planted at Monument With Earth From Each of States.

The Ladies Auxiliary to the National Rural Letter Carriers Association, which yesterday joined with the men's organization in its opening ceremonies, this afternoon will begin its own convention in the Presidential dining room of the Mayflower. Mrs. H. G. Courtney, of Norwalk, Iowa, national president, will present Representative Virginia Jenckes as the principal speaker.

A round of activities yesterday came to a climax for the presidents and secretaries—past and present—of the State organizations, with a banquet in Wesley Hall, attended by more than 100 members of the club into which they are organized.

Officers elected by the club: Mrs. Margaret Myers, St. Helen, Oreg., president; Mrs. N. F. Land, Jackson, Ga., first vice president; Mrs. Bun Raley, Valley Mill, Tex., second vice president, and Mrs. W. S. Durst, Ottima, Okla., secretary-treasurer.

The women arrived for the 7:30 dinner, wearing summer evening frocks and looking as cool and smiling as though they had not spent the day attending programs and seeing the sights of Washington under the August sun.

Mrs. Vaughn Heads President's Club

Mrs. James E. Vaughn, of Hemple, Mo., the president, presided, but there was no "head table." Other officers were seated elsewhere in the room, giving the party the pleasant informality characteristic of all of the convention proceedings of the rural carriers and their wives.

The officers who have served with Mrs. Vaughn during the past year are Mrs. G. P. Mahan, of Knoxville, Tenn., first vice president; Mrs. G. C. Larrimore, of Monroe, Nebr., second vice president; Mrs. Arthur Croach, Medina, N. Y., secretary-treasurer.

One of the surprise features of the banquet was the presentation by Mrs. W. C. Stevens, of Queen Anne, Md., of gavels which had been made by her husband, president of the men's Presidents and Secretaries Club. They were hand-turned from the wood of a cherry tree grown on the estate once owned by William Paca, one of the singers of the Declaration of Independence. He has made them for the presidents of the auxiliaries in the 13 original States. Some were presented earlier in the year at State conventions. Those given by Mrs. Stevens last night went to the presidents of Massachusetts, North and South Carolina, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Rhode Island.

The banquet program, pinted on a roll resembling a camera film, included a welcome by Mrs. J. Ed Cooper, of Washington, a past national president; and response by Mrs. Paul Benson, of Breckenridge, Mo.

The toasts were on the theme: "Candid Camera." That from the North was entitled "Exposure" and was given by Mrs. Wayne Knapp, of Fall River, Wis., immediate past president of her State. That from the South was by Mrs. N. F. Land, of Jackson, Ga., past president of the Georgia Auxiliary; from the East, by Mrs. Arthur Pettie, of Englishtown, N. J. State president there, and, from the West, by Mrs. Fred Paulson, of Bennington, Nebr., head of the auxiliary in her State.

Other entertainment included a trumpet solo by Jasper Jones, of Jackson, Ga.; a reading by Patricia Wright, of Tuscumbia, Mo., and a short talk by Mrs. Courtney.

Tree-Planting Afternoon Feature

In the afternoon the auxiliary members conducted what was one of the principal ceremonies of their convention—the planting of a tree on the Washington Monument grounds in tribute to all rural letter carriers—present, retired and deceased. Mrs. Courtney officiated at the planting, assisted by C. Marshall Finnan, of the National Park Service, and Raymond H. Combs, of Churchville, N. Y., president of the National Rural Letter Carriers' Association.

The delegates-at-large from the 48 States stood in a circle around the tree and, after short talks by these three and those who paid tribute to the carriers, they filed past, pouring earth from their States at the tree's base. They wore blue and white ribbons across their shoulders, bearing the names of their States, and held the soil in paper cups until time for their part of the ceremony. Music for the occasion was provided by the Ohio Rural Carriers' Band, with Jean Teismann, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Teismann, of Lockland, Cincinnati, Ohio, as drum major.

Roads Bureau Friends Honor Hughes' at Fete

Mr. and Mrs. Fred J. Hughes were guests at a farewell dinner given Saturday in their honor at the Rixey Mansion Inn, Country Club Hills, Va., by fellow employes of the Bureau of Public Roads. Mr. and Mrs. Hughes, who were married in Arlington early this month, will leave soon for Newark, where Mr. Hughes will resume his duties as bureau manager of the New Jersey Highway Planning Survey.

Mrs. Hughes, the former Margaret Pickett, of Columbia, S. C., has been employed in the division of the highway transport of the bureau for several years.

Tree Grows in Soil of All States

A TREE whose roots touch the soil of every State in the Union was planted yesterday by the Woman's Auxiliary to the National Rural Letter Carriers' Association on the Washington Monument grounds. Combs, president of the association, is at the left.

Madame Chairman

By Suzanne.

MRS. FRANK S. RAY, of Silver Spring, Md., editor of the National C. A. R. magazine, is founder of one of the most unusual clubs in or about Washington—the Mothers' Memory Club.

Mrs. Ray started it about five years ago following the death of her mother, to whom she was devoted. She gathered other women who desired to pay a living tribute to the memory of their mothers and then launched on a program of kindness to old persons. Mrs. Ray and those associated with her in the club visit homes for the aged, give entertainments and parties for the residents there; take them for outings and from time to time give them small gifts of money which they may spend as they choose.

She conceived this method of keeping alive the beauty of her mother's memory and has found many other women happy in the opportunity to share her plan of an active memorial. There are no dues for membership in the club and the only meetings are those at which plans for future work are made. Mrs. Ray remains its head.

What time she is not occupied with carrying on the kindly program of this society, she is busy at her work for children as editor of the C. A. R. official publication. She has been in this position for nearly 20 years and has not only edited the magazine, but has also done much writing for it.

Mrs. Wallace Directs All-States Show After Exhibition.

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

Bethel 50, of Chicago Order of Job's Daughters, last night participated in the exhibition drill on the lawn of Wardman Park Hotel, one of the features of the eighteenth annual session of the supreme guardian council, which opened there yesterday morning. The Chicago team, 23 girls under Heber O. Craft, their drill master, with other members of the Bethel and their parents, was the largest delegation from any one Bethel attending the convention.

The drill last night preceded the all States' pageant under the direction of Mrs. Laura Wallace, past grand guardian of the District of Columbia, given in Wardman Park Theater.

Drill teams of Bethels in and near the District as well as that from Chicago were in white satin uniforms, trimmed in bright braid and buttons. In the lobby of the hotel was a display of 40 trophies which have been won by the local Bethels, with Bethel 1 in the lead, having 24 to its credit.

Participating last night were the team from Bethel 1, Benetta Barnes, captain; Bethel 2, Winifred Smith, captain; Bethel 3, Shirley Patterson, captain, and Bethel 5, Ruth Brown, captain. One company from the Robert LeBruce Chapter of the De Molay, of which Richard Parson is captain, also took part.

Mrs. H. R. Nickerson, mother of Eleanor Nickerson, is grand marshal of Job's Daughters for Illinois and, with Mr. Nickerson is here for the convention. About 50 Job's Daughters and DeMolays took part in the pageant last night. The Wardman Park Theater was filled for the performance. It began with the story of Job, with Herrone Bartley in the leading role. Marie Deal, of the Eastern Star, soprano of Washington, was soloist for the "Parade of Heroines" which was the third scene in the spectacle.

The pageant followed history from the resurrection of Jesus to the settling of this country, introducing outstanding characters and finally coming down to the founding of the Order of Job's Daughters by "Mother Mick"—Mrs. Ethel T. Wead Mick—who started the organization nearly 20 years ago.

Founder Dedicated Order to Mother

Mrs. Mick, whose home is now in Cleveland, is here for the convention. "I founded Job's Daughters as a living memorial to my mother, Elizabeth Wead," she said. "Like another organization, the Junior American Red Cross, which I founded, it is growing far beyond anything I could have expected."

In the early days of the organization, when a national meeting was held, Mrs. Mick often paid traveling expenses of the guardians in distant places to make it possible for them to attend.

She lived in Omaha when she conceived the idea of starting this, and also the Junior Red Cross, at the time of the war. The picture of her daughter, Ethel, then a child, went all over the county as "The little mother of the Junior Red Cross." Mrs. Mick also organized the Ohio auxiliary to the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the Ak-Sar-Ben, 247, Order of the Eastern Star, in Omaha, which now has 800 members.

She addressed the afternoon session yesterday on "Courage." In the morning she headed the list of distinguished guests at the opening session.

Heather Corsages Are Tribute to Mrs. Warden

Mrs. Elizabeth L. Warden, supreme guardian, was honored by the presentation of a Scotch drill and dance by girls from the "Triangle of the East," the combined Bethels of the District, Maryland and Virginia. She is a native of Scotland, and another gesture in tribute to her was the wearing of corsages of Scotch heather by all the supreme officers.

A necrology service in memory of deceased members was held yesterday afternoon after the address by Mrs. Mick and a business meeting. Reports were given at the business session by Edward C. Schauer, associate supreme guardian; Mrs. M. Virginia Thompson, vice supreme guardian, who will succeed Mrs. Warden as supreme officer of the order; Edward T. Way, vice associate supreme guardian; Stella I. Jensen, supreme guide; Nan Martin, supreme secretary; Mazel Bridges, supreme treasurer, and Mildred T. Stockman, supreme librarian.

Omaha Bethel Brings Black Cats

Job's Daughters of Omaha Give Out 'Hankies' at Meeting

White linen handkerchiefs with black-cat designs in one corner are being carried by many members of Jobs Daughters, here for the session of the supreme guardian council at the Wardman Park Hotel. They were brought by the girls of Bethel 13, of Omaha, and are being given by them to the others.

The handkerchiefs were in much demand when the word went around they were being distributed. About 300 of them were made by the Omaha girls whose chapter is the largest in the country. The members of Bethel 13 also were giving out milk bottle tops and stickers which announced Nebraska as "America's white spot, with no sales tax and no bonded debt."

Mrs. H. H. Schlorff is guardian of Bethel 13 and looks no older than the girls under her supervision. She is smaller than most of them and such a good pal, they call her "Buddy." She is an artist and is responsible for the blackcat insignia and ideas for using it. She has employed it in the design of beautiful make-up kits, of the same material used in the official gowns of the supreme officers. She has made one for each of the officers and painted her name inside on the green satin lining. A little black cat decorates the outside.

Mr. Schlorff, also is attending the convention and the girls call him their "mascott." Mr. and Mrs. Schlorff are taking three of the Omaha delegates with them from Washington on a motor trip through New York and New England and into Canada. In their party are Dorothy Gustafson, queen of the Bethel; Betty Hughes, senior princess, and June Ellen Steinert, guide.

The Washington girls have also been busy making souvenirs for the convention—"The Triangle Tribune," mimeographed and with hand-painted cover, designed by Rose Robbins. The girls who prepared it and printed the covers for the 1,000 books were: Margaret Wranthal, Margaret Yeager and Miss Robbins, of Bethel 1; Marirose Manning, Winnifred Smith and Dorris Bratton, of Bethel 2, with Miss Ruth Ivers in general charge.

Bedtime Stories

Spike Is Admired.

Who truly thinks is always slow
To openly declare "I know."
—Old Mother Nature.

Spike, the yearling son of Lightfoot the Deer, was very well pleased with himself. He had outsmarted a wise old doe who was looked up to as one of the smartest of all the Deer folk in the Green Forest. Three times he had fooled her and made her run when there was no real cause for running. He was not aware that anyone had seen him do it, but always in the Green Forest are many pairs of watchful eyes, and several pairs of these had seen the whole performance.

Blacky the Crow, than whom there is no one with keener wits among the furred and feathered folk, had been sitting in the top of a tree just beyond the little clearing around Farmer Brown's sugar house. He had seen Spike when he found the salted stump on the edge of the clearing. He had chuckled when the old doe who considered that stump her special property had driven Spike away. He had chuckled still more when Spike had put her to sudden flight by racing up behind her as if he himself was badly scared. So when at last she detected the trick and Spike left, Blacky flew after him.

"That was a smart trick, young fellow," said Blacky. "Yes, sir, that was a smart trick. I haven't seen as smart a one for a long time. Who taught it to you?"

"No one taught it to me. I thought of it myself," replied the young buck.

"A smart head on young shoulders," said Blacky admiringly. "But don't be too smart, young fellow. Never let yourself get to be too smart. It often is worse than not being smart enough. Tell me, just how did you happen to think of that trick?"

Young Spike felt flattered. Yes, sir, he did so. And no wonder, for he knew Blacky's reputation for smartness. Everybody in the Green Forest does. "Well," he began, "it was the result of one of the first things I learned when I was big enough to begin to follow my mother."

"What was that" asked Blacky.

"To run first and look into things afterward," replied Spike. "When a Deer is frightened and runs others nearby run also. Perhaps you've noticed that."

Blacky nodded and Spike continued. "It gets so that we don't stop to think but just run. I remembered that and just waited until the old doe was back of me. Then I jumped in the brush and ran straight toward her. She heard me but didn't see me because her back was turned, so she ran too. I almost knew she would."

"You're a worthy son of your parents, but don't be too smart, young fellow; don't be too smart," warned Black as he spread his black wings.

"That was a smart trick, young fellow," said Blacky.

In the sugar house in the clearing four pairs of eyes had watched Spike's clever trick, and he was the subject of much admiring comment.

"That was the smartest thing I've ever seen a Deer do," declared Tommy.

"If I hadn't have seen it I wouldn't have believed that a Deer could think of a trick like that," said Sammy.

"You do think that that was the result of thinking and not just instinct, don't you?" said Sue, turning to the Old Naturalist.

He smiled at Sue's eager face. "I think," said he, "that the result was a combination of intelligent action and instinct."

"Where does instinct come in?" demanded Sammy.

"I know," spoke up Tommy. "On the part of the old doe."

"Right," replied the Old Naturalist. "Her running was instinctive. She ran before she knew from what or from whom she was running. But young Spike's action wasn't instinctive. It was intelligent action. He expected her to run just as she did. If he could speak our language and you should ask him about it I am quite sure that his reply would be 'I planned it that way and don't let anybody tell you different.' And I believe he did. Certainly that action would be hard to explain on the grounds of mere instinct wonderful as instinct is."

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

On my last visit to the old home town out West (87 years old, to be exact) the Mayor, who also happens to be my tailor, insisted on taking me on a tour of the WPA projects around town, where 3,000 of Harry Hopkins' boys are busy altering the landscape.

Harry Hopkins ... new landscape

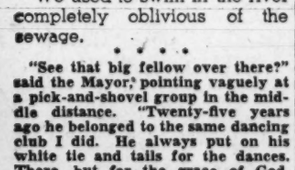
• • • •

He's a darned good tailor, though you'd never suspect it to look at me, and a first-class mayor, too. He assumes responsibility not only for my external appearance but for my moral, spiritual and mental welfare as well.

"I've got to complete your education," he said. "Down at Washington you're cooped up away from things. Come along."

• • • •

So we drove down to the forks of the historic Raccoon and stately Des Moines rivers, where President John Tyler's soldiers built a fort in 1843. Now Franklin Roosevelt's boys are putting the finishing touches on two new bridges, one across each stream, at a V-angle. One more bridge and the forks would be completely hemmed in, a concrete triangle.



"—they dish up the dirt"

Now, due to the vigor of as two-fisted a bunch of Irish and Dutch contractors as ever built a city, beauteous Des Moines already has more bridges compressed within about two miles of its river front than any city in the world. There are four in one quarter-mile stretch.

• • • •

But these two new bridges are necessary. One replaces an old covered bridge which was a romantic spot of my boyhood. After they're finished Harry Hopkins' boys will convert the angles between the two rivers where the fort used to be into a sort of people's playground, which I hope will be a miniature of the playgrounds around the Ellipse and Potomac Park here in the Capital.

• • • •

Then we drove along the line of the new sewer (big enough to drive a small car through) out to the new $2,500,000 sewage disposal plant. There Harry Hopkins' boys have built some sixteen colossal concrete circles, like Paul Bunyan machine gun nests (if those pioneer soldiers had owned a concrete mixer), where the sewage will be sunned, stirred and purified before it's emptied into the river again.

We used to swim in the river completely oblivious of the sewage.

• • • •

"See that big fellow over there?" said the Mayor, pointing vaguely at a pick-and-shovel group in the middle distance. "Twenty-five years ago he belonged to the same dancing club I did. He always put on his white tie and tails for the dances. There, but for the grace of God, shovel you and I."

We watched a crew of three men shovel 5 tons of heavy rock and gravel toward a conveyor belt leading to a concrete mixer in four minutes.

"—grad of a dancing club"

One of 'em was a big handsome chap in his late forties. In a $50 tan silk summer suit he could have passed for a pillar of the august Des Moines Club. He was perspiring freely.

Out toward the Fair Grounds another battalion of Hopkins' men was widening a highway. . . . We passed two places where they had helped straighten stretches of Highways 6 and 65 to save motorists miles of city traffic. (Traffic, incidentally, was thick; the shops seemed jammed.)

• • • •

In another corner of town they were getting ready to multiply the area of the airport by four. . . . Along the river concrete walls had been extended where we used to scramble down the mud banks in our boyhood. . . . There were two new viaducts across the railroad tracks, and on the road to the most expensive country club there was another new bridge to replace the one we had always expected to buckle under three or four heavy trucks.

• • • •

We saw the men dishing the dirt along on several jobs by the shovelful and bucketful. There had been pressure to use machinery. Machines mean economy and speed, but shovels mean wages for more men for more days, $55 month, or $65 or $85 or $94 if they're skilled. . . . And even with shovels they seemed to be getting considerable work done.

And, as they used to say in the city elections, shovelers can vote, and machines can't.

"Do you feel educated?" asked the Mayor.

Park System Asks Budget Boost of 50%

Service Files Request for $1,390,288 for Fiscal Year 1940.

Increase to Be Applied to Enlarged Police, Sport Forces.

To provide increased recreational facilities and better police protection in the public parks, officials of the National Capital Parks yesterday asked for $1,390,228 during the 1940 fiscal year, an increase of more than 50 per cent over the present appropriation.

The District Commissioners were requested to supply the increased funds to make possible the employment of 101 additional persons for the public parks and playgrounds and 15 additional park policemen.

Parks officials specifically requested $141,100 for salaries for the proposed additional employes in the public parks service, $7,880 of which would be required to pay promoted employes.

For general maintenance the officials want 3 foremen gardeners, 8 gardeners, 17 assistant gardeners, 6 mechanics, 16 minor mechanics, 4 assistant foremen of laborers, and 28 junior laborers.

$14,000 for Hospital.

At the same time the Commissioners were presented with a budget estimate of $14,000 for the 1940 fiscal year for general repairs to the Columbia Hospital and Lying-in Asylum. In recent years the appropriation has been only $5,000, but hospital officials this year request a new freight elevator, to cost $9,000.

Land purchases and acquisitions in the past seven years have increased park acreage approximately 15 per cent, or an increase of 752.48 acres. During the same period maintenance appropriations have increased only 3.5 per cent, representing a decrease from $42 to $127 per acre for the present fiscal year. For proper care $225 per acre per year should be available, it was reported.

The sum of $15,000 was requested for additional personnel for maintenance of grounds and supervision of sport and recreational activities, and $10,520 was requested for additional engineering personnel.

General expenses for the public parks was listed at $676,488 for 1940, $287,988 more than this year. New lighting standards for Constitution avenue, from Fifteenth street northwest to the Potomac River, will cost $13,000 and electric service, $6,988.

To improve Ellipse road lighting parks officials requested $8,000.

Since 1934 the annual appropriation for outdoor sports facilities was reduced from $38,000 to $20,000 annually. With the limited funds available, officials said it has been impossible to maintain properly and operate existing recreational facilities, thus resulting in continual complaints from both players and spectators.

Park police asked for $28,500 to pay the 15 additional men. For uniforms and equipment for 1940, the police want $16,000, as compared with this year's appropriation of $9,400.

$1,800 Gem Loot Recovered From Frederick Home

Frederick, Md., Aug. 23 (AP).—Jewelry valued at $1,800 which was taken from the home of Mrs. Mary Waters of Atlantic City has been recovered but the colored youth who took it will not be prosecuted, Sheriff Roy M. Hiltner said today.

He said Mrs. Waters identified the jewelry and refused to prosecute the youth who formerly was employed in her house. The valuables were turned over to her and the youth released, he said.

The prisoner, according to the sheriff, led him to a Frederick house and to a trunk in which the valuables were cached. A wrist watch set in diamonds, a ring with a large center diamond and a circlet of smaller gems and five other rings were recovered, he said.

Files Suit in Reno

MRS. PEYTON HAWES DUNN, District society woman, yesterday filed suit in Reno for a divorce from Henderson S. Dunn, director of the Federal Storage Co., according to an Associated Press dispatch. Mrs. Dunn, daughter of former Senator Harry B. Hawes, of Missouri, charged cruelty and asked for a private hearing.

'Evening of Song' Closes 1938 Outdoor Festival Season

Post Staff Photos.

Three thousand persons gathered on the Washington Monument grounds last night for the final festival program of the season presented by the Community Center Department and National Capital Parks. Some of the spectators are shown. Conducted by Dr. W. Scott Mayo, the Tempo Choral Society presented a program of spiritual and folk songs. It was the society's fifth appearance in the Sylvan Theater.

Capital School Officials Fear Student Influx

Bailey's Ruling Paves Way for Nonresidents to Study Here.

With the opening of District schools less than a month away, officials of the Board of Education yesterday expressed fear an influx of nonresident students might add to the cost of operating the schools.

At the same time the District Commissioners signed a contract with Bahen & Wright, Inc., Washington building contractors of 916 Rhode Island avenue northeast, for the erection of a new school building, which is to be known as the Benjamin Bankeker Junior High School.

Cost of the new structure will be $684,730. The school will be located on the south side of Euclid street, between Georgia avenue and Ninth street northwest. The project is to be completed within 360 calendar days.

School authorities yesterday expressed hope the registration of nonresident students would take place September 6, or as soon thereafter as possible.

Nonresident students from nearby Maryland and Virginia are to register at the schools nearest their homes.

Nathaniel Danowsky, statistician for the school department, pointed out yesterday there were 2,189 nonresident pubils in District schools last year. These cost the District $323,513.84 as against $310,290.75 the previous year. There was a total increase of 772 in the number of students enrolled in the elementary and high schools last year.

The further increase is anticipated this year in view of the ruling of Justice Jennings Bailey in United States District Court that a nonresident child whose parents are employed in the District has the right to attend the District schools.

December 20 Is Date For Air Certificates

Provisions of the civil aeronautics act requiring certificates of competency from many new classes of airmen previously exempt will be put into effect December 20, the Civil Aeronautics Authority announced yesterday.

Men in charge of inspection, maintenance, overhauling or repair of aircraft appliance are among those who will be required to obtain certificates for the first time. The Authority explained postponement of the effective date for certificates of competence will allow more time in which to set up the necessary examination procedure.

At Long Last the District May Wave Flag of Its Own

Commission Will Meet Today to Choose Design From Dozens Submitted by Heraldic Artists; Emblem by DuBois Favored.

By noon today the District may have its official flag, at last.

For by that time members of the District Flag Commission will have been in conference two hours in the offices of District Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen, peering over dozens of proposed official banners.

One designer, A. E. Du Bois, in charge of heraldic section, standardization branch, O. Q. M. C., has the inside track, Hagen, a commission member, said.

Three red stars on a white background range across the top of the flag. There follow, respectively, a red stripe, a white stripe, another red stripe and finally another white stripe. That's three white and two red stripes in all.

Although the emblem must also receive critical appraisal of the Fine Arts Commission, it was pointed out, the commission does not have to abide by any adverse decision on the part of the Fine Arts group once the flag commission makes up its mind.

Six general rules followed were:

Flag should be heraldically correct; it should be simple, and capable of reproduction in various sizes or proportions; the rule of simplicity would also eliminate from consideration any design such as the District Seal, Capitol and Washington Monument; the flag must be distinctive (not to include something that is already used); it should not violate the law of visibility, which in heraldry is that color should not be placed on color, nor metal on metal; and it should be historically associated with the District.

On the commission besides Hazen were the Secretaries of War and Navy, who were represented, respectively, by Capt. A. D. Hopping and Lieut. J. W. Murphy, jr.

The arrival at Annapolis tomorrow marks the end of a three-month training cruise in which the squadrons visited European ports and on their return spent four days in New York and the past five days in Norfolk.

The battleship New York, which made the cruise to Europe, is at the Navy Yard for engine repairs. The 400 midshipmen quartered aboard the New York were transferred to the other two ships for the voyage back to Annapolis.

A native of Harrisburg, Pa., Col. Ewing came to Washington 10 years ago, following his retirement. A rifle and gunpowder expert, he served as adviser to the Government for several years.

He was a member of two championship rifle teams which won the Pan-American and International Palmer trophies in 1913. Col. Ewing has held executive posts with the American Bicycle Co. and the Du-Pont powder works.

Writer, poet, playwright, and world traveler, Col. Ewing was a member of the Army and Navy, Metropolitan, and Lions Clubs, and Sons of the Revolution.

Services were held yesterday at Lee's funeral home.

District Joins Md. Drive for Cleaner River

Gordon to Be 'Observer' at Anti-Pollution Conference.

J. B. Gordon, District sanitary engineer, was designated yesterday as "observer" for the District Commissioners for the meeting tomorrow night of nearby Maryland residents anxious to eliminate river pollution.

The meeting, which will be held in the Jessup-Blair Community House in Silver Spring, was called by Dr. William B. Holton, president of the Bethesda-Chevy Chase Chapter of the Izaak Walton League.

Invited to the meeting were members of the various civic and political organizations of Montgomery and Prince Georges counties.

Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen said yesterday "we weren't invited to the meeting, but we are vitally interested in aiding the elimination of pollution in the Potomac River, Rock Creek and the Anacostia River, and hence a representative of the engineering department will be present."

Commissioner Hazen reiterated his statement the Commissioners were ready to co-operate with Maryland authorities "in every way possible to help clean up the river."

It is expected league officials will discuss the advisability of requesting $500,000 in PWA funds to construct a sewage treatment plant along the Anacostia River at Bladensburg.

3 Inspectors Sent to Check Pay Offenses

They'll Report to District Commissioners as Well as Minimum Board.

Three District health inspectors yesterday were transferred to the Minimum Wage Board to provide a more efficient check on wage violators, by order of the District Commissioners.

The transfer, made on recommendation by Health Officer George C. Ruhland, is effective immediately.

Recently office employes of the wage board have been assigned to outside investigations of violations, it was pointed out. Under the new setup, complaints reaching the office will be investigated by the new inspectors.

The Health Department in the past has been supervising the employment of female labor. A certain amount of duplication resulted under the present arangement, the Commissioners noted.

The three inspectors are Martina R. Haynes, James W. Millspaugh and Mary L. Simpson. Their reports will be made to the District Commissioners and corporation counsel, as well as to the wage board.

U. S. Opens School To Train Seamen

American seamen and licensed personnel of the Merchant Marine were offered the opportunity yesterday by the United States Maritime Commission to enroll in the United States Maritime Service, under which the Government is offering training to merchant seamen.

The training program, to assure an efficient merchant marine personnel, was authorized by Congress in the last session. Enrollment will be confined at present to unemployed sailors. The commission hopes, however, that as many as 3,000 men and 300 officers eventually may receive this training annually.

Taxi Drivers Facing Loss Of Licenses

Police Ordered to Take Plates if Insurance Rule Is Not Met.

Many Have Policies, but None Has Filed Certificates.

As Washington's taxicab operators apparently awaited "the last minute" to comply with the new liability insurance law effective Sunday, they were warned their license plates would be impounded after that date for failure to obtain liability insurance.

The District Commissioners, in approving a recommendation yesterday by Corporation Counsel Elwood H. Seal, instructed the Public Utilities Commission to carry out the regulaiton with police co-operation.

No Certificates Filed.

Meanwhile the commission announced "not a single" cretificate of insurance had been filed with that office, as is required by law. It was explained even though an operator had received his insurance policy the law requires him to file a certificate to that effect with the commission before the deadline Sunday.

"They are probably waiting for the last minute," a spokesman of the commission said.

Unofficial estimates placed the number of policies already written at 2,300. However, certificates for these policies have not been filed with the commission.

Meanwhile, the commission announced eight insurance companies, four of them local, had been certified to write taxicab liability insurance.

These are: Hutchins Mutual Insurance Co. of the District; Citizens Casualty Co., of New York City; American Casualty Co., of Reading, Pa.; Pennsylvania Casualty Co., Lancaster, Pa.; Eastern Mutual Co., Baltimore; National Mutual Co., of the District; Columbia Mutual Insurance, Washington, D. C., and the Amalgamated Casualty Insurance Co., of Washington.

The Columbia Mutual was organized by the officials of the local Premier Cab Association and the Amalgamated by the Blue Light Cab Co.

New Associations Approved.

The commission yesterday approved formation of two new taxicab associations. The Globe Association, with a membership of 130, will be headed by A. S. Harter, and the Federal Association, with more than 100 members, elected A. R. Taylor as director.

Formation of the associations will make it possible for individual members to pay a smaller annual premium under the new taxicab liability insurance law. A provision of the law states taxicab associations may hold for their members a blanket bond or policy not to exceed $75,000.

Spokesmen for the associations point out that they now have a more effective united front to petition Congress for reduced insurance or rebates on clean traffic records.

Sabu, the Fabulous Jungle Lad, To Be Seen in "Drums" Preview

Alexander Korda's Technicolor Production Will Bring India's Juvenile Star to America in Person; Some Musical Background; 'Surprise Pink;' Notes.

A PREVIEW screening of more than ordinary interest has been tentatively set for the Rialto Theater on Monday night at 8:30 o'clock, when a considerable list of invited guests will include dignitaries of the Government and the Diplomatic Corps, motion picture executives and exhibitors, the drama desks of the local press and a few miscellaneous" "visiting firemen."

BELL.

The subject of these gala goings-on will be Alexander Korda's multimillion dollar production of "Drums," starring Sabu, that extraordinary jungle youngster, who was discovered at a comparatively tender age manicuring pachyderms in the elephant stables of the Maharajah of Mysore, in India. Being "just the type," he was given the leading role in Korda's production of "Elephant Boy" and immediately leaped from poverty into the upper salary brackets of the Denham studios in London, one of the largest motion picture production plants in the world. His "fan" mail, in the meantime, has mounted to prodigious proportions and Sabu, at the age of 14, has turned out to be quite a fellow.

Such a world figure has he become, in fact, that he is being brought to America to be present at the Broadway premiere of "Drums" next month. He is scheduled to land in New York on September 12 and Washington is included among the cities which he subsequently will visit "in the flesh"—probably during the run of the picture in this city, at a time and in a theater that remain to be definitely determined. Monday night's preview is planned as a sort of "tune-up" to all this later hoop-de-doo revolving about the unique personality of a kid who must have inherited Aladdin's lamp.

"Drums" is from an original story by A. E. W. Mason, adapted to the screen by Lajos Biro and filmed entirely in Technicolor in the actual Indian locales of the narrative. It is believed to be the first feature film ever photographed in Technicolor for which special color sets were not built on location.

Leading a total cast of 3,000 in support of Sabu, are such distinguished players as Raymond Massey, Canadian-born stage and screen star, as well known in the American theater as he is in Britain's; Roger Livesey, Valerie Hobson, David Tree, Desmond Tester, Francis L. Sullivan and numerous others from the top shelf of Denham's acting forces.

Although ordinarily Alexander Korda's productions for London Films are on the regular release schedules of United Artists in this country, "Drums" is an exception. It is a "special," being marketed independently of the other product of the same company—which ought to be a great boon to the supporters of the Neely bill, over which such lively tilting was done in the last session of Congress.

It will be pleasant to watch "Drums" unspooled, if for no other reason, to determine whether Sabu is really such a ne plus ultra young chap as we believe him to be on the single basis of his precocious work in "Elephant Boy."

If you happened to notice a likeness of Don Cummings on this page Monday morning, as a featured member of the stage bill at the Earle Theater for the week beginning Friday, just forget it. The handsome Mr. Cummings, all done up in his starched, white suit, will not be among those present on Thirteenth street, come day after tomorrow. In his place will be Al Bernie, "the young man of many faces," who will unfurl a series of impersonations for the edification of the faithful. If Mr. Cummings already has been pasted in your scrapbook, it might be a good idea to keep him there for future reference.

The careers of the two popular conductors bringing their orchestras to local stages next week reveal a considerable background of substantial musical training.

George Hall, that suave maestro with the sharply waxed mustachios, coming to Loew's Capitol, hails from a musical family. His father was concert master of the old New York Symphony Orchestra and taught George to play the violin almost before he could walk—George, I mean, not his pater. The son played in the lite Victor Herbert's orchestra while still very young. He originally planned to be a doctor and began his medical studies at Cornell, but limited cash and an enudring love to music put an end to that. He has been on the airwaves since 1922 and for eight successive years provided dance music for the guests of the Taft Hotel in New York.

Tony Martin, bringing his band to the Earle for the first time Friday, was born in Oakland, Calif., on Christmas Day a bit over 20 years ago. While still a youngster in high school, he organized his own orchestra of juvenile instrumentalists and didn't do so badly with it. His excurricular activities, however, cut into his home work a little too much and his mother persuaded him to forget about music until his schooling was completed. After high school, Tony matriculated at St. Mary's College and, among other things, took up the study of wind instruments, composition, theory, etcetera. Out of the halls of scholastic learning, he became an orchestra man. He reached stardom in the films the hard way.

It was in 1931, while broadcasting with an orchestra on the Lucky Strike program, that he began warbling an occasional roundelay into the "mike." Movie scouts induced him to go to Hollywood. He went, but no dice. Four years later he returned, was signed to a contract by RKO-Radio and then transferred to Twentieth Century-Fox, where in three short years he has hit the top in such gay opi as "Sing, Baby, Sing," "Kentucky Moonshine," "Pigskin Parade," "Ali Baba Goes to Town" and the like.

While making "Sing, Baby Sing," he become acquainted with Alice Faye. On September 4, 1937, they staged a romantic Fayed-out and eloped to Yuma, Ariz., where they were married.

Beginning Friday they will be across-the-street rivals at the Earle and Palace—unless Alice should happen to come down to pay hubby a visit in person, in which case . . .

At the end of the fourth day of balloting in the Ross Jewelry Co's voting contest to determine the most popular member of the cast in "Going Native," at Loew's Capitol, Helen Forrest was still leading the pack—just as she was in this column yesterday morning. With many thousands of the slips counted, Miss Forrest was out in front with 1,841 votes; Earline King, another vocalist, was second with 1,528 ballots, and the Lyons Twins third with 1,310. Other feminine entries were trailing. Among the males, Wilbur Hall was first with 1,667 votes, Milbourne Christopher second with 1,613 and Lee Everett third with 1,293. Balloting will continue throughout Thursday night, when "Going Native" ends its week's run.

Those Loew executives evidently have a heart. It had been planned to give the boys and girls of the press a preview squint at "The Texans" yesterday, but the projection-room cooling plant went "boom" and the whole business was called off to prevent the critics' being parboiled in their own juice. Maybe some night soon after the last performance at either the Capitol or Palace. But don't hold your breath.

• • • •

That fellow Sol Sorkin, on the other hand, has no heart whatsoever. While Manager Hardie Meakin, of RKO-Keith's, was sun-burning the top of his head on a Virginia Beach vacation, Sol, next in command, pulled a "sneak preview" of "Carefree," all by himself, and then came around bragging about what a whale of a picture the next Fred Astaire-Ginger Rogers vehicle really is. Now we have to wait until the darn thing opens on Fifteenth street tonight at 6:30 to find out. It had better be good!

"Surprise pink" is the artist's name for one of the new colors being used in the decoration of the Atlas Theater, rapidly nearing its formal opening to the public at 1331 H street, northeast. Although it may look just like plain pink to a majority of the patrons of the new neighborhood house, the color adviser of the project insists that it is a seductively subtle shade of new creation. Woo-woo!

• • • •

Boy-Be-Careful-of-That-Spectrum Note.

It would be nice if that "surprise pink" could be set off with a few furtive dashes of astonished amber, nonplussed purple and horrified heliotrope. Ravishing, no end!

New Contracts.

First "rushes" on "Artists and Models Abroad," which stars Jack Benny and Joan Bennett, revealed such promise for the seven young stock actresses cast in the production that options were exereised on all seven girls by the studio.

Yippee! Look Out for One-Gun 'Grannie!'

MAY ROBSON,

as she appears in the role of "Grannie," in Paramount's epic production of "The Texans," a saga of the old Southwest, to be seen for the first time in Washington on the screen at Loew's Capitol Theater for the week beginning Friday. Joan Bennett and Randolph Scott provide the romantic interest, with Walter Brennan, Robert Barrat and others of note in support.

In Hollywood

Hollywood, Aug. 23.

Isn't it about time something was done to squelch those two-footed Hollywood locusts who operate under the innocent guise of "Guides to Movie Stars' Homes." They not only guide, but snap candid shots of tourists in front of stars' homes, and fill their heads with all kinds of gossip, which they're more than willing to write to the folk back home. Nice work and a nice profit for guiding.

HEDDA HOPPER

An acquaintance of mine took the tour the other day and you'd be shocked to hear some of the things I learned about stars—some, my best friends. I had quite a time persuading her there wasn't a word of truth in it. Why do we always want to believe the worst?

They're going to tame the "Dead End" kids, I understand. In "They Made Me a Criminal," the boys are picking dates instead of making them.

Writer Aldous Huxley took a bungalow at a Hollywood hotel. Next door there were a lot of kids who got up to celebrate each dawn. Huxley complained. Celebration ceased. One morning, when he was sitting on his porch, the kids spied him from a distance—marched past, singing "Onward Christian Soldiers."

Bing Crosby's adding a new wing to his house at Del Mar. Wonder if it means an addition to the family as well?

Lionel Barrymore did most of his scenes in "You Can't Take It With You" in a wheel chair and on crutches.

When our couples divorce, how do they divide their dogs? Are they divorced, too? Mighty tough on the dogs. Think the Tailwaggers should do something about it.

Freddie Bartholomew is the only gentleman in the ladies' dressing room wing at Metro, and he's none too pleased about it. I know lots of others who'd pay for his opportunity.

Jessie Ralph, before she started "St. Louis Blues," had herself a time in New York. Did all the things she's wanted to but never had time or money before. Took in shows and night clubs, drove through the park in an open barouche. Took the night boat to Albany to see if those stories were true, but said she was too old to find out—no one even spoke to her.

It was fun at the Tropics watching Bruce Cabot, Pat di Cicco and Franchot Tone trying to wangle an introduction out of the proprietor, to Alice Faye. Mr. Tone was the one introduced.

Martha Sleeper, who's appeared in so many pictures, and played my daughter in "Dinner At Eight," is dividing her time between the New York stage and designing costume jewelry for a big Fifth avenue house.

Pity poor Gladys Swarthout "who's about to return to do her final stint for Paramount, but won't be able to occupy her home. It's rented to Hope Hampton who's decided to linger on.

Jack Benny, back from the Northwest, is so rested and restless to begin again—anything that will take him away from the birds and the bees. Says an actor should only relax four weeks at a time. He may be reduced to playing the fiddle again, then heaven help the neighbors.

Because Bob Burns has to listen to Irvin Cobb's stories, Bob gets even by telling him about his 5-month-old baby. The doctor advises Bob to wait till she's stronger before telling her anything about her father—and I mean anything.

Six Guards Protect Oriental Antiques

Chinese art objects and antiques valued at more than $50,000 have been obtained by the Twentieth Century-Fox Studios for use as "props" in the filming of "By the Dawn's Early Light," a thrilling story of adventure and romance laid in northern China.

Six guards have been assigned to 24-hour duty on the set to see that none of the precious objects is damaged or carried away.

A good many of the artices were imported direct from China particularly for this picture. Among them is a hand-wrought teak bed, weighing 600 pounds, which is insured for $5,000. The bed serves as a couch for beautiful Alice Faye, star of the production, who plays the part of a stranded American entertainer.

He Bounced.

A stunt man he employed twice fell from his airplane while in flight and was uninjured either time, according to Garland Lincoln, veteran pilot, now doing stunt work in Paramount's Technicolor cavalcade of the air, "Men With Wings."

Lively Comedy Is Ably Acted At Cross Road

By Nelson B. Bell

The most enlivening "barn theater" entertainment available to Washington theatergoers this week is to be found at the Cross Roads rustic playhouse, over at Bailey's Crossroads, in Virginia. The bill is Paul Osborn's highly seasoned comedy of "The Vinegar Tree" and it is being expertly and hilariously done by a cast of seven skillful farceurs.

"The Vinegar Tree" is no stranger to Washington, with its slightly balmy characters assembled in the smart living-room of the Augustus Merricks' summer house. Augustus Merrick, it will be recalled, is an amusingly crotchety, middle-aged gentleman given to speaking his mind. Mrs. Laura Merrick, his wife, is merely given to speaking. She hasn't too much mind. Their daughter, Leone, is "on the verge" with a forthright young fellow by the name of Geoffrey Cole, but this romance is slightly complicated by the sudden interest of the older Winifred Mansfield in Geoffrey and Leone's impetuous infatuation with Max Lawrence, an ostensibly eligible young artist, for whom mother already has set her cap.

Out of this thoroughly tangled domestic situation emerge many brittle speeches—a few on the slightly daring side—and a sophisticated juggling of attachments and fidelities that make the play an ideal vehicle for light and flippant midsummer diversion.

The leading roles are played with a plausibility and zest that are rarely encountered along the side roads and in the barnyards of the theater. In the role of Laura Merrick, Catharine Ryan gives a performance that more than once suggests a deftly fashioned composite of Alice Brady and Billie Burke in its voluble fripery and infinite capacity for turning the unfortunate faux pas. The crusty Mr. Merrick is impersonated with contrasting, but equal, effectiveness by David Kaigler, and Rebecca Rice, as the daughter, cleverly reveals traces of both sides of her immediate ancestry. Jack Wilson, not yet quite steady in his lines last evening, in the role of Max; Josephine Orendorff, the perceptive and suble Winifred Mansfield; Don Sisler, as Geoffrey, and William Draper, as Louis, the gold-braided butler, render efficient support.

The single handicap under which the Cross Roads Theater seems to labor is a lack of sufficient seating capacity to accommodate all those who are anxious to see its plays. The cozy little hayloft was packed to the limit of its standing-room last night.

Nats Battle 12 Innings to Beat Browns, 6-5

The Washington Post Sports

*X WASHINGTON: WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 24, 1938 19

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Boy, page an oculist. I guess the old glimmers aren't what they used to be. If the main-event fighters are taking dry dives at Griffith Stadium, I want to see 'em. It's annoying to have these things happen 4 feet from your face and not know it.

POVICH.

The other night I saw what I thought was a perfectly swell knockout—a one-two to the chin, a falling body, a ten-count and all the trimmings to delight the savage in a guy. But it must have been some other fight I was watching, because what should we discover when we read the next day's papers but that the fight was just another exhibition of marine life.

I mean the Bill Boyd-Billy Nichy affair at Griffith Stadium last Monday night. "Dive!" the fellows in the press row shouted as Nichy went to the canvas. One afternoon paper detected a springboard in the ring and set forth that the ringside spectators were doused with spray from the splash. Another afternoon journal reported that the affair had a prearranged tinge and that ringsiders would wear bathing suits if there were a rematch. Even The Post's fight expert was slightly suspicious.

Not for Divers Reasons.

It's all very confusing. I didn't get wet and I was close enough to the ropes to be the third man in the ring. I didn't see anybody wearing waterwings and I didn't hear any splash. Not so much as a drop of spray hit me in the face and I saw no jacknives, half-gainers, back flips or anything else in the diving repertoire.

What I did see was big Boyd reach out with a long, cruising left and belt Nichy on the point of the chin, and then bring a round-house right from the direction of second base and belt Nichy on the chin again. As far as I was concerned, Nichy didn't go down for diver's reasons. He went down because anybody who was careless or groggy enough to leave his chin in the path of those two swats figured to go down—and out.

If that fight was in the tank, they'd better exhume the Civil War and Custer's Last Fight and the Alamo. Nichy didn't have to look for a way out. He was doing very well for himself until Dempsey's boy tagged him with those two numbing clouts. In fact, 20 seconds before the canvas came up and hit Nichy, the Pittsburgh lad looked like the winner of the fight.

Before Boyd caught Nichy with those two crushers he was a very sick-looking fellow, indeed, in there. A Nichy uppercut had exploded on Boyd's chin and for a moment it appeared that Boyd was looking for a place to fall. Nichy looked all over the winner at that point and the loud-voiced two-bit bettors who had laid 8 to 5 on Dempsey's boy were no less ill than Boyd himself.

About Washington Bettors.

A wild Nichy right just grazed Boyd's chin or there would have been an entirely different ending to that battle at Griffith Stadium. As it was Nichy merely spent himself against a guy who outweighed him by 12 pounds (Boyd looked 20 pounds heavier), and he didn't have the spring in his legs to back away from the big fellow.

The practice of shouting "dive!" has long been overdone by Washington ringsiders. It has been heard in matches between $100 fighters who have had little to gain by winning and nothing by losing. Nichy was fighting the other night for $150 and $10 expense money. He had just returned to the ring after a long layoff. If he could beat Jack Dempsey's protege, he could command more money in future fights. There was every incentive for him to win.

The motive for taking a dive would be, of course, the consideration he would get from the Dempsey forces. But it would add little to Boyd's reputation to knock over a $150 fighter like Nichy, so that's out. And Jack Dempsey is not so serious about Boyd as a white hope as he and the promoters would have you believe. The Dempsey sponsorship is a tonic to the gate, but Dempsey isn't trifling with kids just out of the amateurs, like Boyd. He is a very busy man with his restaurant business and his dabbling with fighters is merely a favor to Max Waxman, the real manager of Boyd and Dempsey's business manager.

Nichy Didn't Lack Incentive

And the suspicion that a dive could be arranged or inspired by the local betting fraternity is too absurd to be entertained. Despite the verbosity and the ostentatious displays of the betting gentry who infest the ringside at Griffith Stadium, no money of any consequence changes hands. They are strictly two-bit bettors, as the saying is. Wave as much as a sawbuck under their noses and ask for decent odds and they'd kick over the benches trying to flee.

They don't fix little fights like the Nichy-Boyd affair. Big fights, yes, sometimes. There isn't much doubt of that. But until Washington gets in the big leagues of fistiana, we won't have that to worry about. There hasn't been a fight in Washington history, with the exception of the Petey Sarron-Freddie Miller featherweight title affair a few years ago, that has been worth fixing. Honest. Methinks Washington fight writers take their little world too seriously sometimes.

Buddy Myer Slaps Single To Win Game

By Shirley Povich.

The Browns and Nats took turns attempting to lose a ball game yesterday and the Browns finally succeeded in the twelfth inning. Buddy Myer, arriving at bat with the bases full, whacked a line drive against the rightfield wall, sent the winning run home and put a stop to the three-hour proceedings.

The final score was 6 to 5, but only 4 of the 11 runs that crossed the plate were truly legitimate. At various times during the late innings, both the Nats and the Browns showed great reluctance to win the ball game.

The Nats tossed three errors into the record, making the Browns a gift of three runs. Ossie Bluege's misplay in the sixth inning enabled the St. Louis club to wipe out Washington's 2-0 lead at that point and in the eighth, Don Heffner's muff restored the Nats to a 4-3 lead.

Travis, West Fumble.

But Cecil Travis generously contributed a fumble that enabled the Browns to tie the score in the ninth and when Sammy West fumbled an outfield single in the tenth, the Nats were trailing, 5-4.

West, however, redeemed himself almost immediately. He banged one of young Ed Cole's pitches to the centerfield corner for a three-bagger with one out in the tenth and Pinch Hitter Buddy Myer fetched him home with a long fly to Mel Almada.

Joe Krakauskas, the third pitcher the Nats sent to the mound after Washington errors had sabotaged the clever pitching of Dutch Leonard, was a powerful help to the Nats in the last two innings. He struck out four of the six Browns to face him and received credit for the victory.

Bonura Starts Rally.

Zeke Bonura inspired the winning run in the twelfth when he banged one of Cole's offerings for a single to center to start the inning. Wasdell ran for Bonura and galloped to second safely when Clift fielded Travis' bunt and threw tardily to second in an attempt for a force play, Travis reaching first. West filled the bases with a bunt past Cole and then along came Myer.

With a long fly certain to score the winning run, the St. Louis outfielders were playing in close in an attempt to cut off a line drive, but Right Fielder Beau Bell took only one look at Myer's long drive over his head and expressed great indifference as it bounded against the fence on the first hop to end the ball game.

Their victory availed the Nats little in their battle for fourth place what with the Tigers winning a double-header from Philadelphia. The Detroit club pulled into a tie for fourth place with the Nats.

Mills Cracks in Second.

Leonard and young Howard Mills hooked up in a clever duel in the early innings with the Nats taking a 2-0 lead in the fourth after being held to one hit by the St. Louis southpaw. Mills lost both his effectiveness and his control in that inning. After filling the bases with none out by pitching a double to Simmons, a walk to Bonura and a single to Travis, he struck out West and forced Bluege to foul out. But he walked Rick Ferrell and Leonard to force two runs across the plate and the Nats into a 2-0 lead.

Leonard pitched three-hit ball until the sixth. Then he filled the bases with one out and a run scored on Mills' long fly. Clift dumped a Texas league single into short right and Bluege, who retrieved Clift's hit, apparently forgot that Almada was also on base. When he made no motion to get the ball home, Almada rounded third and also

Chisox Rout Wes Ferrell

Yankees Split Doubles With White Sox.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 23.—The world champion Yankees could get no better than an even break with the Chicago White Sox today as they embarked on a schedule of five straight double-headers.

After taking an 11-3 shellacking in the opener, in which the Sox got to Wes Ferrell for 11 hits, including four home runs, the Yanks turned around and won the nightcap, 3-1, on four hits. Two of those were homers, one by Bill Dickey and the other by Lou Gehrig, and they accounted for all the champions' runs.

Ferrell, who had won his first start as a Yankee, was given a thorough going-over by the Chicagoans, who scored on him in each of the five innings he pitched, got one four-bagger in each of the last four frames he worked, and then got two runs off Ivy Paul Andrews.

Thornton Lee, who set down the league leaders with seven hits, got the first of four homers, with none on in the second. Rip Radcliff hit one in the third with a man on, Marvin Owen hit one in the fourth with none on, and George Rensa clouted another in the fifth with a mate on the base paths. In all the Sox got nine runs off Ferrell.

The second game, in contrast, was a tight pitching duel between Bump Hadley, who gave up eight hits, and John Rigney, who allowed the Yanks four and struck out nine. The New Yorkers took the lead in the second, on Dickey's circuit clout; saw it tied in the fifth, on a triple by Manager Jimmy Dykes and Schlueter's single, and then

Olney Team Stars Get Trials by Nats

Steve and Duke Jarboe, star performers with Steve Cochrane's Olney Theater baseball team, yesterday impressed Washington baseball bosses in a pregame tryout.

The two brothers were highly praised by Coach Clyde Milan who has invited the pair to work out regularly with the Nats. Steve, a right-handed outfielder, 18 years old, displayed talent as a ball hawk. Duke Jarboe, 17, a lefthanded-hitting third baseman, was tabbed as a natural fielder and the Nats are interested in his hitting possibilities.

Small Colleges Fading as Source Of Best Pro Players, Says Baugh

By "Slingin' Sammy" Baugh.

(Forward Passing Champion, National Football League.)

The fellow who played his college football for a small school is supposed to have as good a chance of making good in pro football as the chap who came out of a large college, but I doubt that.

SAMMY BAUGH.

It used to be true, but I don't believe it is any longer. There was a time not so many years ago when professional football was forced to depend on the small colleges for its recruits. The All-Americans and other big stars didn't go in for pro football eight or ten years ago. Times were good, and most any fellow who made a football reputation in college could land a soft job with some firm.

The pro league was loosely organized then, and the club owners didn't have the money to hire the big-name fellows. They aimed to get one or two All-Americans on their club and surround 'em with other players from the small colleges who didn't demand big bonuses for signing. They couldn't afford to sign a big-name star for every position.

So, the fellows from the small colleges blossomed as professional stars, and the idea spread that they were the best kind of football players—the chaps who were buried in the little school. And when the big-name stars did a few flops in pro football, the idea was more firmly planted.

But when the first depression came along, those big college stars found that they couldn't swap their reputations for nice-paying jobs in the business world. They flocked into pro football which offered ready money. And now the situation is virtually reversed. It is the former All-Americans and other fellows who starred for the prominent colleges who are the foundation of almost every team in the National Professional League.

• • • •

The pro league club owners no longer have to pay the All-Americans big bonuses for signing. And they are going after the stars systematically with their draft list. It's rare these days that a college player who is drafted refuses to go into the pro league. In three months of pro football they stand to earn as much as they would be paid in a year at any other job they could command.

Of course, there are exceptions. Players from the smaller colleges do make good in the pro league and sometimes they are sensations. Take Tuffy Leemans, of the New York Giants, for example. Leemans was with a second-rate football college when he was at George Washington University and now he's one of the big stars in the pro league.

There are plenty of other pro league stars who came from small colleges—Cliff Battles, of West Virginia Wesleyan, and Dutch Clark, of Colorado, for example—but the great majority of such fellows became pro league stars before the great influx of big college men into the pro league began.

If you don't think that the really big-shot stars in college are joining up with the pros these days, let's go back over the roster of the last two teams that represented the College All-Stars against the pro champions at Chicago. On that All-Star team I played with at Chicago in 1937, 13 of us went into the pro league and made good.

• • • •

Big Ed Widseth, of Minnesota, became a regular tackle with the Giants, and Gaynell Tinsley, our left end, made good in a big way with the Chicago Cardinals. Svendsen went to the Packers as a center; Huffman got a job in the Detroit backfield; Drake proved to be Cleveland's best back; Sam Francis joined the Bears; Jankowski made good with the Packers, and Bassi is with the Giants. I'm with the Redskins, in case you hadn't heard.

And the year before, in 1936, the College All-Stars sent Leemans to the Giants, Riley Smith and Jim Karcher to the Redskins, Studahar to the Bears and Tillie Manton to the Giants, just to mention a few. They don't simply join up with the pro clubs, they make good with 'em.

Of course, those pro league coaches won't turn down a good football player from a small college, but they'd rather have a fellow who has made his reputation with a big school. There are several reasons for that.

The fellow who wins All-American honors must be a good football player. To earn his reputation, he had to star in a class of football that comes pretty close to being as tough as the pro league. He knows the fundamentals backwards, and he has had good coaching.

• • • •

The fellow who stars for a smaller college may be a stand-out in his class, but he has not been playing against tough opposition. He really hasn't proved himself. When he gets into the pro league, if he does, he may not be ready to the same extent as the fellow who was prepped by a big-college coach for three years in games that had a bearing on the national title, perhaps.

He won't have had the same experience in big-time football. And anybody who doesn't think that most big colleges play big-time football ought to take a fling at it sometime. I found out about this thing called experience when I went into professional baseball this year.

I played shortstop and third base, and when a ball was hit to me I almost had to stop and think whether it was a slow roller or hard hit and where to make the play. Sometimes I couldn't make up my mind quick enough and played it like a chump. But there were other guys in our infield—experienced infielders—who didn't have to stop and think. With them the proper play was natural and mechanical. That's a great help.

So the player out of the big college has a big edge. He has been through the mill, in a sense, and he's more acceptable. He's going in for pro football in increasing numbers and no longer are the majority of pros coming out of the small schools. Little colleges used to provide more pro league stars than big colleges because players from the big schools didn't go in for pro football in such numbers. It is the same reason why white sheep give more wool than black sheep—because there are more white sheep.

(Sammy Baugh's next article will appear Saturday.)

Track Meet To Johnson

Phil Fox's Playground Wins City Title.

More than 2,000 juvenile trackmen, all sizes, roamed the greensward at Central Stadium yesterday, participating in the annual Department of Playgrounds meet, which was won by Johnson-Powell, with a total of 37 points.

Rosedale, compiling an aggregate of 27 markers, finished second, while Virginia avenue finished a close third with 26 points.

Under the capable coaching of Phil Fox, himself a three-letterman at Wilson Teachers' College, the Johnson-Powell trackmen proved conclusively that they were the tops in the track department by scoring a comparative easy victory over a host of playgrounds from all over the city.

The playgrounds had been practicing for this meet for more than a month, and this year, due to the elimination of the divisional meets, interest ran unusually high in the city-wide meet.

All-California Davis Cup Team Is Selected

Budge, Riggs, Mako and Hunt Will Make Up America's Defensive Net Squad; Budge and Mako Will Serve as Doubles Combination.

By Jack Cuddy.

United Press Staff Writer.

New York, Aug. 23.—America's first all-California defending Davis Cup team was named today coincident with hints that another famous Californian, "Queen" Helen Wills Moody, has retired from competitive tennis.

The four youngsters assigned to defend the cup against Australia at Germantown, Pa., during the Labor Day week-end are Don Budge, of Oakland and Bobby Riggs, Gene Mako and Joe Hunt, all of Los Angeles.

For several weeks tennis circles considered Budge, Riggs and Mako as certain of berths on the team. But there was some question as to whether Hunt or Veteran Sidney B. Wood, of New York, would make the fourth place.

The U. S. Lawn Tennis Association Davis Cup committee met last night and picked Hunt, despite Joe's defeat by Wood last Saturday in the semifinals of the Newport Casino tourney. Walter L. Pate, chairman of the committee, made the announcement today. Pate, who served as captain of the team which wrested the cup from England last year will act in the same capacity again.

It is expected that Budge the world's top-ranking player will handle the No. 1 singles; Riggs, No. 2, with Budge and Mako performing in the doubles and Hunt being held in reserve. The actual order of play will not be decided until the draw is made at Germantown 24 hours before the challenge round opens on September 3. Riggs and Hunt are newcomers to the team.

Meanwhile, the Davis Cup team will gather at the Germantown Cricket Club immediately after conclusion of the doubles championship tournament now being played at Chestnut Hill, Mass. The team members will tune up with junior Davis Cup squad members.

St. John's Grid Hopefuls Meet at School Tonight

All candidates for the St. John's Prep football team are urged to attend a meeting at the school at 7 o'clock this evening. At that time plans will be discussed for the football camp which Coach Gene Augusterfore will establish at Cedarhurst, Md.

The boys will leave for Cedarhurst Friday and return a week later.

Joe Hiestand Sets Record

By the Associated Press.

Vandalia, Ohio, Aug. 23.—Joe Hiestand, 32-year-old farmer from Hillsboro, Ohio, master-craftsman of the clay target sport, ran up an unbroken and unfinished string of 766 clays for a world record and won the North American championship today for the third time in four years at the Grand American trapshoot.

Mrs. Lela Hall, petite wife of a Strasburg, Mo., inn-keeper, crashed 195 of 200 to capture the women's title for the fourth straight year.

Three years ago Hiestand captured five championships at the Grand American. Two years ago he won seven, the greatest cash and trophy collecting spree in the event's 39-year-history, but last year he was shorn of all his laurels.

Fred Tomlin, of Glassboro, N. J., ran a string to 714 yesterday to break the record of 621 set 15 years ago, but Hiestand eclipsed this mark by 52 and retained a chance to stretch it still further.

The Hillsboro hot-shot tied with Ned Lilly, of Stanton, Mich., for the clay target title with a score of 200 of 200, and then broke 25 more to beat his Wolverine foe in the shoot-off. Lilly missed the fourth clay of the extra heat.

Hiestand's 25 targets in the shoot-off were not added to his long run, since only registered targets in regular events are included in the records. He started here with a "backlog" of 66 straight carried over from the Yorklyn, Del., shoot recently.

4 Favorites Lose at Net

By the Associated Press.

Brookline, Mass., Aug. 23.—A wholesale massacre of favorites was narrowly averted today as the men's field in the National doubles tennis tournament at Longwood was reduced to the quarter finals, which only four of the eight seeded teams were strong enough to gain.

A quarter of the favorites were wiped out yesterday, another fourth of them faltered today and, in addition, the probable finalists, Don Budge and Gene Mako of the United States Davis Cup forces, and Adrian Quist and Jack Bromwich, the Australian aces, were extended to a threatening degree.

Budge and Mako, meeting the stubborn Wayne Sabin, of Los Angeles, and Elwood Cooke, of Portland, Oreg., for the second time in a week, surrendered the first four games before settling down for an uphill battle that won them a 4—6, 9—7, 6—3, 6—3 victory. Quist and Bromwich had almost as much as they could handle to move through another unseeded pair, Hal Surface, of Kansas City, and Donald

In This Corner

New York, Aug. 23.—Pick-ups on the brawn patrol:

Miami hopes to boom it's New Year's Day Orange Bowl football game into a "major league" affair this year . . . The city commission has appropriated $25,000—twice as much as last year—to help publicize the game and Tropical Park has agreed to run its races on the morning of January 2 (New Year's Day is on a Sunday) so the game won't have to compete with the track for customers as it has in former years . . .

JACK CUDDY.

* * * *

Gus Sincore is a lucky umpire . . . He has been working games for years down at Homestead, Fla., 25 miles outside Miami—he is deaf and dumb . . . Never has to argue with players or fans . . . St. Louis scribes report that one of the things Branch Rickey has against Cardinal Manager Frankie Frisch is that he sips a bottle of beer after a game . . . Rickey is a prohibitionist, but Owner Sam Breadon, however, enjoys a drink now and then . . . Rogers Hornsby, down in Chattanooga, has hopes of returning as a major league manager . . . Brooklyn's his choice, but the latest is that Leo Durocher, captain of the Dodgers, has the inside track with V. P. Larry MacPhail when and if a change is made . . .

* * * *

* * * *

The Phillies are considering offers from Texas, Mississippi and Florida for a 1939 training camp site . . . Lou Gehrig bought a new automobile last month . . . two weeks later he was awarded a free sedan for being voted the most popular first baseman in that cereal company's poll . . . and on the same subject, here's a tip for other ball players who'd like to win that award: many of the fans who voted for previous winners, said they cast ballots for them because they never refused to give out an autograph . . .

* * * *

This is going to be a great year for football, if the number of publicity releases which have reached this desk mean anything . . . only some schools are going to be disappointed, because of the 1,001 stories to roll in, practically everyone predicts an unbeaten season . . . Notre Dame reports it expects to announce any day now that the Army game already is a sell-out . . . Hardin-Simmons University will operate this year under four co-captains. That's one way of keeping everybody happy . . .

10-Day Meet To Start at Nearby Oval

Upper Marlboro Purse Features Card; First Race at 2 P. M.

By Walter Haight.

Not since the curtain was rung down on the muddy meeting at Bowie last mid-April have the bangtails, geegees, platers, dogs, or just plain race horses been in action as close to Washington as they will be this afternoon. At 2 o'clock, or as shortly thereafter as the starter can line up the field, there will be the rumble of hoofs at nearby Marlboro, officially opening a ten-day stay of the thoroughbreds at the Prince Georges County half-mile track.

Located about 8 miles past the end of the Pennsylvania Avenue Bridge, Marlboro is looked upon, along with Bowie and Laurel, as truly a Washington track and investments that come out of that huge Federal pay roll are cordially invited. For horses, Marlboro is using virtually the same four-legged animals which have been circling the smaller tracks since late spring. The jockeys will be the same who rode at Charles Town, Hagerstown and the other points.

Despite reports of $75,000 worth of improvements, the same sharp turns and diminutive grandstand will greet the customers. However, the money used will be of the same variety employed in the pay-offs at Saratoga, Hialeah and Santa Anita. And there is every reason to believe that the finishes will be just as close.

Listed under the improvements will be the appearance for the first time at Marlboro of the photo finish. The Jones camera, rather dependable as cameras go, will be used to separate the houses in close finishes. The judges, who have done a pretty fair job at Marlboro, can sit tight and puff their cigars on the close ones at this meeting.

Marlboro has joined the tracks which have speeded up the daily double. Instead of letting the daily double pool remain dormant in the mutuel plant from the first to the third races, the management has changed the "double" races to the first and second events. The customers are expected to get the twin wager off their minds early and, officials hope, concentrate on sending the greenbacks in on the third race.

Racing Secretary Eddie Brennan didn't have much trouble lining up the opening program. He simply opened the doors of the secretary's office and the horsemen piled in. A line on just how many horses are available and the eagerness of their handlers to get them in action can be ascertained by the fact that today's third race actually drew 86 entries. Brennan was forced to exclude 72 horses from the race, after assuring the limit of eight starting positions and placing six others on the "also eligible" list.

Today's features, the Upper Marlboro Purse and the Willard Hotel Purse, drew all the horses the officials will allow to face the barrier. The former, a 5½-furlong sprint, will be sought by such able horse-flesh as Patsey Begone, Mama's Boy, Never Home, Indiana and others, with Brainchild, Postponement and Dixie S. on the reserve list.

The Willard, at 1 1-16 miles, was the lure for Irish Vote, Ardor, Mirmiss, Jungo, Heart Play and others capable over a distance of ground. Two other long races, always popular at the half-mile courses, are scheduled as the sixth and seventh races. Full fields are assured for both.

The daily double races are on a 3 and 4-year-old maiden affair that opens the program and a 2-year-old event. Both are at sprint routes.

Bill Bennings . . . at the Post

Selections at Marlboro.

Dear Al: Well, we're located in the water-barrel country, down where they're cutting the tobacco. I have inspected the track, and I'm glad to report that there have been some improvements—not just bubbles from a press agent's thin skull. There're some concrete walks and a finish camera outfit. Lots of horses and all the boys who were riding at Cumberland. One of the jockeys, in registering at the Marlboro Hotel, wrote as his residence, "Any place I hang my hat." Clocker Mike was around, off and on, during the day. I asked if he could be quoted on his new invention, and he said, "I'm not ready to make public my findings, but shall do so within the next few days." He didn't ask to be quoted the next time he opened his mouth, but I'm going to quote him. He asked, "Whatta you say to letting me have half a check eating money, boss?" I could have said, "I shall do so within the next few days," but I weakened. As far as I san see, everything is ready for the bang of the bangtails and the rustle of the dough in Prince Georges County. The entries show full fields for all the events. No War Admirals or Seabiscuits, but legs and hides that can get around the track, so I guess there will be action for all. One trainer shipped two horses to the track without making reservations for stalls. Despite the fact that 100 new horse apartments have been constructed this year, they were all filled. The two steeds were stabled in the pigpen over at the livestock exhibition and they'll be running just the same. As I told you the other day, the fair will not be staged along with the races this year. It will be held October 13, 14 and 15. The officials of the Southern Maryland Agricultural Association felt that the fair detracted from the interest in racing. Now you tell one. Here's how I expect them to finish today.

BILL.

First Race—Grunt may be the right one in the day's opener. Went postward twice at Cumberland with Jackson up and we can toss out those efforts. Agawam form suggests this one will emerge from the maiden ranks. Arachne has been training at Bowie and is reported fit. Has never raced this cheap. Bah's Choice and Roving Eye have had many chances.

Second Race — Home Hunter downed Sure Miss when the pair met at Bel Air. The Distraction cold should like the slow going at this course and I'm going to string along. Sure Miss drops weight off that last and is dangerous. Mr. Fingers had poor racing luck twice at Hagerstown and probably will be a keen factor.

Third Race—Veritas seems better suited here than at the longer route and appears ready to take down a set of brackets. Goantell's recent efforts have been good and this one should be close up. Double On Sea can better that last and is a threat.

Fourth Race—Irish Vote, winner of his last in a common gallop, seems capable of making it two in a row in this field. Needs only the right handling. Ardor is better than generally rated and deserves a good position in any picks. Mirmiss is a possibility.

Fifth Race—Mama's Boy takes 8 pounds off that last and appears ready to take the measure of his rival, Patsey Begone. It looke like a two-horse race to me. Brainchild, first on the reserve list, gets in with 100 pounds and will be close if in action.

Sixth Race—Little Wackie has done about everything asked on the half-mile circuit and seems the days' best. However, I expect the stable to put in a scratch. Canynge and Bav shape up as best of the others.

Seventh Race—Helen Bab's last can be tossed out. She will like the going today and I see no reason for mistak

Young Burkemo Shoots Brilliant 69 to Win Public Links Medal

Washington Entries Fail At Cleveland

Scores of 150 and Below Make Grade; Gipe Cards a 151.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, Aug. 23.—Curly-haired Walter Burkemo, 20, of Detroit, 126 pounds of golfing grit, whipped par and a crack field to win medalist honors in the seventeenth annual National public links golf championship today, posting a brilliant card of 69 for a 36-hole qualifying total of 141 strokes.

As more highly rated leaders of the first day's play faltered before high winds which swept Highland Park municipal course, the blond former Michigan junior champion, with a first round 72 to his credit, went out in par 36 and came home in 33, two under par.

Burkemo, playing in his third tournament in 16 days, showed he could "take it"—both from a long, tricky course and pressure from a fast field. He got in most of his golf this summer between odd jobs which included clerk duty in Detroit's traffic court.

Furgol Is Second.

Tall Eddie Furgol, unemployed metal polisher from Utica, N. Y., who shared the first round lead at 68 with the husky Louisville shop worker, Pete Doll, carded a 74 for second place honors at 142 strokes. Doll posted a 78 for a 146 aggregate. Bruce McCormick, the strapping Los Angeles fireman and defending champion, skidded to a six-over-par 77 for a 36-hole total of 147, but remained the favorite.

Don Erickson, gas company employe from Los Angeles and medalist and finalist last year, and Bert Taro, young Seattle, Wash., star, were bracketed at 143. All players with scores of 150 and under qualified, plus one with a 36-hole total of 151. He was Louis Cyr, railroad worker from Portland, Oreg., who won a playoff for the sixty-fourth qualifying berth from 17 other contestants.

James Gipe Has 151.

Los Angeles' quartet of McCormick, Erickson, George Lance and Neil Whitney, won the team title with a record aggregate of 584 strokes, three under the mark made last year by Sacramento's team at San Francisco. Utica, N. Y., placed second at 586, with Detroit at 589, Portland, Oreg., at 594 and Newark, N. J., and Louisville bracketed at 597. Sacramento's unit had a 607 total.

Scores of Washington golfers yesterday at Cleveland:

James Gipe, 73, 78—151.
Bradley Burrows, 80, 72—152.
Andrew Oliveri, 80, 80—160.
Bob Morris, 86, 78—164.

Helen Wills Moody Out Of National Net Play

Neuritis and Fibrositis, Ailments Suffered From Tennis, May End Her Career.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 23.—Because of the effects of "a severe attack of neuritis," which has kept her out of competition since returning from her Wimbledon triumph, Helen Wills Moody today notified the U. S. Lawn Tennis Association she would not play in the forthcoming national women's singles championships at Forest Hills.

Mrs. Moody disclosed her decision in a letter to Edward B. Moss, executive secretary of the U. S. L. T. A.

She explained she had failed to respond to treatment, since coming back to this country, and did not feel that she would be able, without sufficient practice, "to play in such competition as offered by Forest Hills."

The long-time queen of the tennis courts, who undertook a comeback campaign this year with the idea of seeking to regain the American singles crown as well as honors at Wimbledon, accompanied her notice of withdrawal with a refund of her entire expenses, amounting to $1,309.45, for her trip to England with the Wightman Cup team.

She expressed the hope the United States Lawn Tennis Association would accept the refund, in view of her inability to fulfill her promise to compete in the National tournament.

While making no definite commitment as to her plans otherwise, the tone of Mrs. Moody's letter was interpreted by some observers as indicating a farewell to amateur tennis.

The Californian has had several professional offers in recent years. So far, however, she has denied any interest in pro tennis and disclaimed any intention to consider new proposals to capitalize her court fame.

The Wimbledon champion's withdrawal came not only as blow to plans for the national championships, due to start at the West Side Club, September 8, but dissipated chances of a renewal of rivalry with Helen Jacobs, who lost to Mrs. Moody in this year's Wimbledon final.

The last time Mrs. Moody played in the nationals, at Forest Hills, she defaulted in the third set of the final round to Miss Jacobs. That was in 1933.

Dr. John S. Davis, jr., physician to Mrs. Moody, said the tennis star was suffering from neuritis in her side and fibrositis, caused by thickened tissue over the muscles, in her back and legs. She is bothered when she takes a deep breath, suffers occasional pain and tires very easily. Many tennis players are stricken with the malady, said Dr. Davis.

Recovery, said Dr. Davis, is a slow process, often requiring a year's treatment.

Bosox Win Two From Tribe, Take Second Place in Race

Scores Are 13-3, 14-12; Foxx's Homer, Bases Filled, Wins Nightcap.

By the Associated Press.

Boston, Aug. 23.—Triumphant in two slugging matches with Cleveland, which were high-spotted by Jimmy Foxx's game-winning homer with the bases loaded, the Red Sox today took over second place in the American League by more than a game margin.

The Croninmen easily won the first game, 13 to 3, but ran into trouble in the nightcap. With the score 12 to 10 for the Indians in the last of the ninth, Foxx slammed out his thirty-fifth homer to give the game to Boston, 14 to 12.

The stage was set perfectly for the Sox' first sacker in the second game. There were two out, Boston needed at least three runs, and the bases were filled. Foxx knocked the first ball pitched by Willis Hudlin out of the park, to the cheers of 18,500 fans. Jimmy's thirty-fourth homer came in the third inning of that same game, off Dennis Galehouse.

The score was 10-all in the first of the ninth when Ken Keltner hit a four-bagger, which also scored Hal Trosky.

Tigers Take Pair and Tie For Fourth

Hand Macks a Double Defeat; Greenberg, York Homer.

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, Aug. 23.—Hank Greenberg hit his forty-third home run of the season and Rudy York hit his twenty-eighth, and sundry other Tigers swung with vigor and success today as Detroit whipped the Athletics in both ends of a double-header, 13 to 5 and 8 to 3.

The Tigers made 16 hits off Lynn Nelson and Dave Smith in the first game and 14 off Bud Thomas and Ed Smith in the nightcap. The A's have now lost nine games in a row.

In the first game Pete Fox homered with one aboard and Charley Gehringer with two on base. In the second game, York's four bagger with two on put the Tigers ahead in the fifth inning. Greenberg's drive in the sixth left him eight days ahead of Babe Ruth's record on this date, 1927, when Ruth hit his record-breaking total of 60.

Lou Finney clouted a four bagger for the A's, one of the 10 hits made off George Gill.

Nats

scored to put the Browns in front, 3-2.

The Nats reclaimed the lead in the eighth, thanks to Heffner. Simmons walked and Bonura singled, but Travis popped up. West hit a perfect double-play grounder to Heffner, who fumbled, and Simmons scored. Bluege singled Bonura home.

Those 4-3 figures stood up until the ninth when Travis muffed Heath's grounder with none out. Heffner sacrificed him to second and when Pinch Hitter Sullivan appeared for Mills, Leonard was lifted and Hogsett got the job. Sullivan flied out, but Hogsett walked Almada and then pitched a single to McQuinn that tied the game at 4-4.

The Browns went to the front, 5-4, in the tenth after Clift singled and took second when West muffed the pick-up. Bell sacrificed him to third and Hogsett was replaced by Krakauskas, who eventually pitched a single to Heffner that scored Clift.

The Nats got that run back with the help of West's triple in the tenth, and then, of course, Meyer broke up the ball game in the twelfth.

It May Be Archibald-Rodak for Featherweight Title

By Lewis F. Atchison.

A bolt of good fortune struck Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn squarely on the hip-pocket last night when the New York State Athletic Commission ordered Featherweight Champion Henry Armstrong to sign within 15 days to defend his crown against Joey Archibald or declare it vacated.

Stunned and visibly affected by the news, Ahearn reached for his private filing case, located in the hip pocket, and brought forth Archibald's signed contract for Monday night's 10-round bout with Tony Dupre. He fondled it tenderly.

"Lookit," he mumbled, "Lookit. They're gonna make him fight the champion. He may be the next featherweight champion of the world and I got him fighting here Monday night. I got him fighting a guy what may knock him off. I may have two champions on my hands. Ain't it wonderful?"

It was wonderful, indeed. The high tribunal of sport in New York State handed Mr. Ahearn the best break of his matchmaking career when it served Armstrong with its order to fight or get off the throne, and Ahearn recognizes that fact. But he didn't stop to gloat over his good fortune, but rushed to a telephone and began pouring nickels, dimes and quarters down its steel throat.

He called Nate Lewis, agent for Leo Rodak, of Chicago, and offered him a match with the winner of Monday night's bout in September. Ahearn has Archibald under contract for one more appearance here, and he figures that now it may be for a championship fight. Mr. Lewis, who is not slow to recognize the gentle thumping of opportunity on his fighter's door, bent a receptive ear to Mr. Ahearn's proposition, and in so many words—at $2.45 per 5 minutes, instructed him to proceed with the plans and declare him in if things worked out satisfactorily.

Archibald, meanwhile, must worry about Dupre before seting his mind to an Armstrong bout, which, it is redicted, will never be fought for the simple reason that Henry can't make 126 pounds without amputating an arm.

Joey must rub out the technical kayo Dupre holds over him — scored about a year ago when Archibald lost hits temper and used his tongue more than his gloves in a bout for the New England bantamweight championship. Dupre's flat-footed, jabbing, hit and duck tactics annoyed Joey so much he finally abandoned all hope of connecting with a good, solid punch and started to give Tony a verbal beating.

A few of the stray adjectives bounced up against the referee's eardrum, unfortunately, and he disqualified Archibald pronto.

Archibald, in the opinion of innumerable fans, will be a perfect foil for Dupre's cool, calculating punching. They argue that when he rushes in with his customary brashness Dupre will measure him and clout him with both hands, possibly cut him up and probably knock him down. They don't see how Joey can fight his usual fight against the blond Italian counter-puncher and get away with it.

But supporters of the Providence kid point to Al Reid's convincing victory over Dupre last year and claim that Archibald, whom they rate higher than Reid, will do the same thing. Reid was in and out of range from the first bell. He'd creep in low with a jab, whisk over a right, then fade out of reach. He was a moth around a flame that didn't get close enough to have its wings singed. They figure Archibald will follow the same plan of battle and give Dupre an artistic shellacking.

Rassle Gals Home Lovers

Mat Work Just Career to Women Stars.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

Take it from Joe Turner's publicity department—which should know about these things—Ruby Allen and Teddy Morgan, the little ladies who clash tomorrow night at Griffith Stadium, are sweet, homeloving lassies, not a couple of hard-boiled easter eggs as you might have been led to believe.

Mr. Turner's office, which busies itself collecting data on wrestlers, fighters and items pertaining to the sports, put its ace agent on the case and warned him not to return empty handed.

Ruby, the ace agent reported, keeps her home as spotless as a new vest. She's an interior decorator at heart and spends much of her time rearranging the furniture, putting a mirror here, hanging an Audubon print there and the piano in that corner where it will not take up too much room. She loves to crochet, knit and, of course, sew. She is, in a word, a model housekeeper.

Teddy Morgan, the agent discovered, leans more toward the culinary arts than housekeeping. She can sling together the tastiest omelette that ever scorched a pan. Her roasts are the toast of Boston—and beans, of course, rank high on her list of attainments. She has her own private recipes for tomato relish, which large restaurants would love to have on their menus. And she doesn't slight pastries, but is a better-than-average artist in this line. She is, in a word, a real cook.

The agent also learned—with a gentle nudge in the ribs from the front office—that the girls are simply crazy about wrestling and are certain to give the fans a lot of action tomorrow night.

And with a prod from the sports editor we are reminded that Bibber McCoy meets Cliff Olson in another portion of the triple-header feature, and a five-man battle-royal will round out the bill.

Tennis

McNeill, of Oklahoma City, for a 6—8, 7—5, 6—3, 6—0 triumph.

The day's major upset came when Sydney Wood, of New York, and Joe Hunt, of Los Angeles, frittered away a half-dozen easy chances to bow to the unranked Australian team of Harry Mopman and Leonard Schwartz, whose winning scores were 3—6, 6—2, 7—5, 5—7, 6—4.

The foreign list's casualties were Ferenc Puncec and Franjo Kukuljevic, of Yugoslavia, who made the fatal mistake of remaining behind the baselines for Russell Bobbitt, of Atlanta, and Frank Guernsey, of Orlando, Fla., the national intercollegiate titlist, who alternately drove and lobbed for a 6—2, 10—3, 8—6 victory in a dull match.

Only three foreign teams survived the third round. In the other international clashes Yvon Petra and Bernard Destremau, of France, eliminated August Ganzenmuller and J. Norman Anderson, the New Yorkers, 6—3, 6—4, 6—2, and Wilmer Allison and Johnny Van Ryn, the Austin, Tex., veterans now striving for their third title, knocked out J. Patrick Hughes and Charles E. D. Hare, of England, 3—6, 6—3, 14—12, 6—1.

One unexpected reversal marked the women's section of the tourney, the 6—3, 6—4 setback suffered by fourth-seeded Barbara Winslow, of Los Angles, and Marilynn McRae, of Little Rock, Ark., from Mrs. Harry Hopman and Dorothy Stevensen, of Australia.

Man of the Month

By Arch McDonald.

(WJSV-Wheaties Baseball Commentator.)

Each day, Arch McDonald distributes 10 points among the Nats whose play was most helpful to the Washington Club. At the end of each month The Washington Post will award to the leading player a gift in token of the honor of being The Post-Wheaties "Man of the Month."

Buddy Myer earned the largest share of points yesterday in the Man of the Month contest award by virtue of his late-inning slugging against the Browns. The 10 points were distributed as follows:

To Myer, three points, because he drove across the tying run in the tenth inning with a long fly to centerfield and because he broke up the game in the twelfth with a long single with the bases full.

To Zeke Bonura, two points, because his single in the eighth figured in two important runs and because his single in the twelfth led to the winning run.

To Dutch Leonard, two points, because he held the Browns to two earned runs in the 8 1-3 innings he pitched.

To Joe Krakauskas, two points, because his relief pitching and his four strikeouts in the last two innings held the Browns in check.

To Sammy West, one point, because his three-bagger enabled the Nats to tie the score in the eighth inning.

The Score:

Zeke Bonura	41	Buddy Lewis	9

Bees Take Opener, 6-0; Pirates Go 14 Rounds to Win, 4 to 3.

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, Aug. 23.—Boston's bothersome Bees shut out Pittsburgh's National League leaders, 6 to 0, in the first half of a double-header today and then battled for 14 innings before finally giving way to the Pirates, 4 to 3, in the nightcap.

The baseball marathon kept 12,294 fans in their seats more than five hours and reduced the Pirates' margin over the second place Giants half a game to five games as New York cuffed the Chicago Cubs.

An error in the fast-closing dusk gave the Pirates their victory. Lee Handley opened the fourteenth with a single and advanced to second as Bill Brubaker grounded out. Paul Waner sent a sharp rap back of first which Elbie Fletcher managed to field, but Dick Merriwell Errickson, Boston's third relief pitcher, dropped the throw and Handley scored.

U. S. and Dutch Interests Form Trade Group

Holland House Will Be a Clearing House Between the Two Countries.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New York, Aug. 23.—Leading Dutch and American commercial and banking interests are joining forces in a move to develop a closer business and financial relationship between this country and the Netherlands, it was revealed today with the completion of organization of the Holland House Corporation of the Netherlands.

Holland House will serve as a clearing house for trade and financial transactions between the two countries, providing a focal point, heretofore lacking, for the establishment of contacts and for initiating and carrying on negotiations. It will be a nonprofit institution. Temporary quarters have been opened here in the International Building, Rockefeller Center, pending completion of plans for a permanent home. Offices also will be opened in Amsterdam.

Fenton B. Turck, jr., vice president of the American Radiator & Standard Sanitary Corporation, has been elected president of Holland House Corporation. He will serve without salary, retaining his executive post with American Radiator.

Prominent Directors.

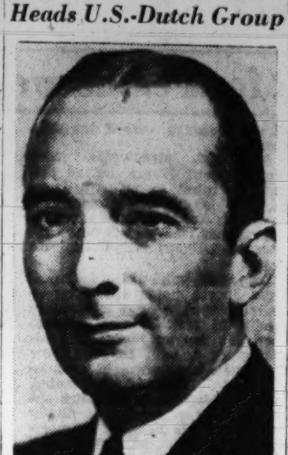
Among the directors are Winthrop W. Aldrich, chairman, Chase National Bank; O. L. Alexander, chairman, American Enka Corporation; Henry L. Doherty, president, Cities Service Co.; G. A. Dunlop, managing director, Netherlands Indies Commercial Bank; W. S. Farish, president, Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey; H. R. Jolles, vice president, Brown Harriman & Co., Inc.; Howard C. Shepard, vice president, National City Bank of New York; Robert Stanley, president, International Nickel Co. of Canada, Ltd.; G. S. Walden, chairman, Socony-Vacuum Oil Co.; Thomas J. Watson, president, International Business Machines Corporation, and R. G. A. van der Woude, president, Shell Union Oil Corporation.

Mr. Turck, who is a descendant of early Dutch settlers in America and a trustee of the Holland Society of New York, said today:

"A principal purpose of Holland House will be to develop between the United States and the Netherlands a community of interest comparable to that which now exists between Great Britain and Netherlands. From the commercial standpoint, these countries are the three great trading nations of the world, and New York, London and Amsterdam are the three great capital markets.

"Common traditions and a common viewpoint have brought London and Amsterdam into a close working arrangement, expressed in sharing opportunities and in innumerable transactions engaged in for joint profit, to the mutual advantage of British and Dutch business. Between New York and London there has been developing in recent years a similar trend toward American and British interests acting as copartners in joint enterprises, but comparatively little such intercourse now exists between New York and Amsterdam."

Heads U.S.-Dutch Group



FENTON B. TURCK, Jr., vice president, American Radiator & Standard Sanitary Corporation, who has been elected president of the newly organized Holland House Corporation of the Netherlands.

Cotton Higher; December 8.34

New York, Aug. 23 (AP).—Cotton advanced today on scattering trade and commission house demand, which revealed a scarcity of contracts. December sold up from 8.26 to 8.36 and closed at 8.34, with final prices 6 to 8 points net higher.

Trading was quiet as traders still waited for an official announcement on Government cotton loan terms. The market opened 2 points lower to 1 higher with the effects of disappointing cables offset by a little trade and foreign buying. While there was no persistent demand, the selling was even smaller and some buying was attracted by firmness of stocks and rubber, and reports of impending improvement in automobile production schedules. Southern hedging remained light as spot cotton business was restricted.

Comparatively small ginnings were reported by the Census Bureau, the total for the season prior to August 16 being 313,934 bales, against 514,524 and 208,509 bales to the corresponding dates in the two preceding seasons, respectively.

Boston Wool Market.

Boston, Aug. 23 (AP) (U. S. Dept. Agr.).—A few buyers were showing interest in good French combing lengths fine territory wools in original bags today. Most bids on this type of wool were around 62 cents, scoured basis. Small lots were offered occasionally at this price, but sizable lots were held mostly at around 65 cents, scoured basis, or steady compared with last week. Country packed ⅜ and ¼ blood bright fleece wools were being offered from the Middle West in fair amounts at 30 cents in the grease, delivered East, but buyers were offering mostly only 28 to 29 cents.

Balt. & Ohio Plans Lower Bond Interest

Seeks Voluntary Arrangement to Avoid Reorganization.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 23 (AP).—Daniel Willard, president of Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, today issued a statement declaring the road was working on a plan to voluntarily place interest of some bonds on a contingent basis, thus foregoing sacrifice of bond principal that would accompany reorganization of the carrier under the Federal bankruptcy laws.

"Preservation of the principal and interest of those who have invested their money in the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad is the primary duty of the management of the road, and for this reason a plan for placing some of the interest on a contingent basis is being considered," Willard said.

"It would seem much easier for the railroad to have sought recourse to section 77 of the bankruptcy act rather than the slower method of negotiations. However, such an action would have meant that our security holders might be called on to sacrifice a part of their principal and much of their interest.

The proposed plan for voluntary reduction of interest rates on B. & O. bonds was reported to have progressed to the point where it may be submitted to the board of directors for consideration at a meeting tentatively scheduled for next Tuesday.

Butter Futures Drop Despite Heavy Buying

Chicago, Aug. 23 (AP).—Butter futures tumbled ¾ cent a pound to new low ground since 1934 today under selling touched off, traders said, by unseasonably heavy receipts at New York.

Before the market righted itself the November delivery sold at 23⅜. The fall came in the face of continued heavy cash purchases by the Dairy Products Marketing Association, federally financed organization to stabilize butter prices.

Whisky Stocks Rise Despite Cut in Output

Wilford S. Alexander, the Federal alcohol administrator, estimated yesterday that despite a 55 per cent drop in whisky production since 1936, bonded warehouse whisky stocks totaled 471,159,560 gallons last June 30.

The warehouse figure was nearly 100,000,000 gallons greater than on December 31, 1936, and 18,760,000 gallons higher than on December 31, 1937.

Liquor Firms Win Dismissal of Charges

Wilford S. Alexander, the Federal alcohol administrator, dismissed yesterday charges of liquor law violation against four Eastern liquor corporations. They were: Schenley Distributors, Inc., N. Y.; Schenley Products Co., N. J.; Eastern Distillers Syndicate, Inc., N. J., and Schenley Distributors of New England, Inc., of Massachusetts.

All had denied the charges of paying bonuses to trade buyers and had contested the proceedings.

Strength in Automotive Shares Carries Market Higher in Active Trading.

New York, Aug. 23.—Credit for a welcome upward spurt in stock prices today went to the motor industry. There were a number of items in the day's news which stiffened the backbone of those hopeful thinkers who have been predicting a better tone in business with the approach of Labor Day, and as the most important of them centered about the automobile industry it was these stocks that started a rally shortly after the opening.

The entire list was carried forward and the composite average showed a net gain for the day of 0.96 point. Encouraging to the bullish forces was the fact that trading expanded on the wave of higher prices, the turnover on the big board amounting to 1,075,810 shares. There were 34 issues that scored new maximums for 1938 and of the 760 issues traded in, 570 carried plus signs. Gains of from 1 to more than 3 points were well scattered throughout the list of active favorites.

Setting the pace was General Motors, which closed up 2 points and was the day's most active stock. It was one of those to score a new high for the year, along with Chrysler, which was the second on the active list and jumped 3⅛ points. The day in speculation was largely given over to the motors, tire stocks and issues of companies in allied lines. United States Rubber gained 1⅝, Yellow Truck a point, Borg Warner 1¾, Goodyear Tire 1⅜, Mack Trucks 1½, White Motor about a point, Lof Lof Glass 2⅞, Motor Products 1¼ and Byers 1¾. Similar gains were made by other companies connected with the motor industry.

Used Car Sales.

Particularly cheering to the followers of this industry has been the report of progress in cleaning up the used car market. To this was added yesterday reports of good demand for new cars and of retooling preparatory to the production of the models of next year. The smaller companies, competing with the big three, are expected to make some unusual departures in their new machines.

All such reports were gobbled up in the street as bullish indications of better days ahead for the many concerns which supply the motor manufacturers with their supplies and parts. Activity in the steel shares followed quickly yesterday when the motor list picked up. United States Steel added 1⅛, Bethlehem 1⅞, National a point, Youngstown 1¼, and Republic about a point. Metals were not far behind, with Anaconda the most active, up 1⅛.

Wide gainers today in addition to the above included American Smelting 1⅞, Telephone 2⅛, American Radiator 1, Consolidated Edison 1⅛, duPont 3½, Harvester 2, Johns Manville 3, Sears Roebuck 1⅜, Texas 1⅜, Union Carbide 2⅜, United States Gypsum 1¾, and Westinghouse 1½.

Leading commodity markets came under the influence of the Government, wheat trading being influenced by restricted buying due to lack of clarification of the Government's expected export subsidy while in the cotton market the trade awaited an official Washington announcement of the new Government loan. Price movements were narrow in both markets, wheat closing unchanged to ⅜ cent higher while cotton ended the day up 6 to 8 points.

Junior Rails Higher.

Low-priced railroad bonds were prominent in the listed market today, on indications that RFC lending may enable certain roads to meet early maturities and other cash requirements. Gains up to 4 points were recorded in such issues, with the upward trend of equities contributing to the bond advance. United States Treasury bonds drifted lower, mainly on indications that indirect methods of taxing exempt bonds are under consideration in Washington. High-grade corporate issues were steady, and foreign bonds remained irregular. Turnover was $5,120,000.

Southern Railway bonds moved up 1 to 3½ points as progress was made toward a loan from the Federal agency for meeting early requirements. The 4s of this road due next month almost touched par value. New York Central, Nickel Plate, Southern Pacific and other bonds in this general group likewise advanced sharply. Borderline rails made a little progress, and most default issues also improved. Noteworthy exceptions to the upward trend were chiefly inactive bonds that appeared on the tape for the first time in months.

Alleghany Corporation issues moved upward with the rail list, and some of the utility holding bonds also were better. Industrial convertibles were buoyant on the strength of related equities. Local tractions receded on fresh indications of the inroads being made on traffic by the city-owned system. Amusement and commodity bonds made progress.

Long term United States Treasury issues lost small fractions on the news that Congressional leaders are studying indirect taxation of exempt securities. Best corporate bonds remained in demand, however, for it appears that the new flotations of the week are apt to move quickly into investor hands. Telephone bonds and well rated utility operating issues were in mild request, while United States Steel debentures touched their high of the year. The genuinely high-grade rails were quiet and firm.

In the foreign section Argentines remained firm, while the well regarded issues of Australian, Canadian and Scandinavian origin also held close to former levels. Japanese bonds lost fractions, and Italians showed similarly small advances. European and Latin-American default bonds attracted little interest.

Wheat Prices Hold Steady In Thin Market

Traders Await Definite News of Export Subsidy Plan.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Aug. 23.—Restricted buying interest and light hedge selling resulted in a thin, nervous wheat market today, with prices bobbing up and down in a range of 1⅛ cents and winding up at only slight net gains.

Lack of clarification of the Government export subsidy plan was blamed by some traders for diminished buying power. Only light hedging pressure in proportion to heavy receipts at Minneapolis and Duluth was evidenced. This was believed due to the fact that much new wheat is going into storage in preparation for acceptance of Government loans.

Activity on either side of the market was limited, therefore, and during the first two hours trading was the dullest in weeks. There was a short-lived rally at noon partly in sympathy with strength in securities that pushed quotations up more than a cent from early lows, but the gains could not be held.

Wheat closed unchanged to ⅝ higher, compared with yesterday's finish; September, 63¾@63⅞; December, 65¾@65⅞; corn, ⅛ off to ⅜ up; September, 52⅛; December, 49@49⅜; oats, ⅛ to ¼ higher; rye, ⅜ to ⅝ up; lard, 8 to 10 lower.

Foreign Markets.

London, Aug. 23 (AP).—Price movements were mixed in the stock market with a renewed decline in domestic rails, some of which reacted more than three points. Fears of sharp dividend reduction by poor railroad traffic returns this year was responsible for questions of the lowest level in several years. Artificial silk shares were strong on rumors of price advances for rayon in the United States. Oil-related securities and transatlantics closed higher and leading industrials held steady. Mejal and oil issues remained quiet.

Paris, Aug. 23 (AP).—Railroad stocks and international shares were weak in an otherwise firm stock market today. Suez Canal declined 90 francs and Royal Dutch was off 30. Rentes finished 75 centimes up to 130 lower. Industrials closed higher.

Liverpool, Aug. 23 (AP).—Cotton declined under hedge selling against outside growths, and commission house liquidation following easiness in overseas markets. Final prices were unchanged to 4 points down. Wheat futures sold off on rumors that import duty against American wheat may be temporarily withdrawn. Easier continental prices and liquidation were also factors. Prices closed ½d to ¾d net lower.

WHEN ROY DECIDED TO GO IN FOR POLITICAL WRITING HE REFUSED TO WORK IN THE TRAILER WE HAD — SAID IT WAS A BOURGEOIS TRAILER, AND MADE HIM FEEL LIKE A TRAITOR TO HIS CLASS — SO HE SOLD IT AND MADE THIS OUT OF A COUPLE OF OLD PIANO BOXES AND A PACKING CASE. HE'S SURE MOSCOW WOULD APPROVE OF THE CHANGE

Bob Burns Says—

I never saw a big, successful executive that was chicken-hearted. A man in that position has'ta hire and fire a lot of people and while anybody can hire, you have'ta have a pretty stoney heart to fire a man. I often think that's the reason my folks never went in much for big business. They're jest naturally too tender hearted.

I was sittin' on Uncle Sanky's porch one day in August when we saw a man come trudgin' wearily down a hot, dusty road. He asked how far it was into Van Buren, Uncle Sanky said "It's about half a mile, brother."

After the man'd gone, I said "Uncle Sanky, you know it's more than half a mile into Van Buren!" And Uncle Sanky says "Yes, but he was a nice polite fella and he looked so tired that I didn't have the heart to tell him it was four miles."

Barber Kills Self, Despite His Fortune

Returns to Old Shop and Dies by Gas; He Made 3 Millions.

By the Associated Press

San Francisco, Aug. 23.—The coroner's office wrote down as a suicide today the death of Eletto Corvi, a millionaire former barber who never felt quite at home away from his old shop in the Latin quarter.

Corvi was alone in the old shop yesterday when a gas blast wrecked it, injuring him fatally.

Deputy Coroner Mike Brown said Corvi himself had set off the explosion after sealing up crevices of the room and filling it with gas.

Brown made public a note found near the body which read: "Danger for gas—forgive me, Ada and family, tired of living."

The barber effected an astonishing coup in the stock market 12 years ago, and retired with a fortune reputed to have been $3,000,000. He bought a mansion in San Francisco's aristocratic Pacific Heights district and moved there with his family.

But Corvi failed to find happiness in his new surroundings. More and more in recent years he visited the haunts of his humbler days. In the last few months, his friends said, he had appeared several times a week at the modest little shop where he once worked.

Attorneys for the family said the Corvi fortune was intact.

Md. Youths Find Fake Coin Plant

Baltimore, Aug. 23 (AP).—Two teenage brothers led police to a complete counterfeiting plant here today.

The boys, James Gembicki, 14, and Joseph, 11, came to Patrolmen Donohue and Roy Hoffman with a battered half-dollar to ask if it were genuine.

It wasn't and the boys led the officers to a nearby patch of woods where they had found it in a plaster mold. There the officers found a chair, work bench, several ingots of metal, a heater, 15 wood and plaster molds and a half-dozen quarters and half dollars that had been cast in them.

Federal officials were notified.

Ernest W. Howard, Retired Battalion Chief, Dies at 70

Ernest W. Howard, 70, retired battalion chief of the District Fire Department, died yesterday at his home, 812 D street northeast.

ERNEST W. HOWARD.

During the Kann's warehouse fire in 1925, he was commended again for his heroism. Several years before he retired in 1933, he saved the life of a boy who suffered a cut artery in his arm.

Mr. Howard was born in Montgomery County, Md., December 19, 1868.

One of his sons, Ernest, jr., is a private at No. 6 Truck Co., and another, Lester A. Howard, a hack inspector with the Police Department. He also leaves his wife, Mrs. Cora A. Howard; another son, Lawrence, two daughters, Mrs. Isabelle Cooper and Mrs. Madeline Calmon, and 17 grandchildren, all of Washington, and a sister, Mrs. Ellen Harding, of Gaithersburg, Md.

Funeral services will be held Friday at 9 a. m. in St. Joseph's Church. Burial will be in Mount Olivet Cemetery.
